PRESIDENT LOWELL DEFENDS STUDENTS FROM CHARGES OF IMMORALITY

To form a true estimate of college life one must see all sides of it. One must see the man who while earning money to put himself through college is helping to support his mother at home and his sister at Radcliffe. One must see the man who strives ceaselessly to bind his classmates together in a broader and more democratic fellowship.

The American college presents problems grave enough to try the spirit of any one, but a man who joins a college community in middle life, and is brought into close touch with both professors and students, gains a stronger faith in human nature.

WARD OFF AGAIN ON AIR TRIP

SUSQUEHANNA, Pa., Sept. 16.—James J. Ward landed here at 11:02 to-day, after flying from Calleson, N. Y., in his aeroplane from New York to the Pacific coast in an attempt to win the Hearst prize of $50,000. At times he flew better than a mile a minute.

Just before Ward was about to start he discovered that the large gas tank on his craft was leaking badly. The gasoline poured from the opening in the huge tank in alarming quantities when the motor was started. The flames from two cylinders licked around the huge tank to the dismay of the spectators. The motor was instantly stopped and the flames were extinguished by Ward. No damage resulted.

He was delayed in starting while waiting for the fog to lift. Ward was up early looking over his machine and seeing that it was in good shape. The weather was cloudy when he went out to the old pleasure park where his machine lay, but he said a breath of wind was stirring.

"This looks good," said the young aviator. "I'll get off to-day. I hope to get to Attica, 200 miles. Then I will go into Buffalo to-morrow and leave at noon for Chicago. I would be in Buffalo to-day if it was not been for the storm yesterday."

Betters Mile a Minute.

Ward passed over Longedby at 10:13 a. m. This place is seven miles west of Calleson. The airman was traveling faster than a mile a minute.

Ward passed Lordsville at 10:20. This is seven miles west of Calleson and 153 miles from Jersey City. He had flown the seventeen miles between Calleson and Lordsville in fifteen minutes.

Ward did not lose much time in refits after he started. As the machine rose he described a wide and graceful circle, soared into mid air and rapidly dwindled to a speck in the sky.

Ward swung off in the general direction of Susquehanna, but did not follow the Erie railroad track. The track here makes a four-mile detour around the Susquehanna mountains. Ward soared to an altitude of 1,000 feet and swung straight over the mountains. The wind was at a high velocity, but Ward, at a terrific pace, driving him ahead, holding his course steadily.

Ward flew over Stockport at 10:24. This is 34 miles from Calleson. His speed was terrific.

Hedgers Ready to Fly.

Calhealth P. Hodgers, the oldest aviator who will start in the Hearst $50,000 coast to coast flight, is in New York today. He intends leaving Sheepshead Bay race track to-morrow.

His specially constructed model "E X" Wright biplane arrived in New York today from Dayton, O., and was taken out to Sheepshead Bay on an auto truck. The machine had been partly assembled and crowds followed the truck as it passed through the streets of New York and Brooklyn. This afternoon the biplane will be christened the Vin Pez, after which Hedgers intends making the final flights in it. It is capable of making seventy-five miles an hour.

Supervising those wond-rful flights is a committee consisting of ten noted men, including Mayor John F. Fitzgerald and Thomas W. Lawson of Boston. Benjamin

FEAR KIEV MASSACRE OF JEWS

KIEV, Russia, Sept. 16.—Jewish residents began fleeing from Kiev to-day in fear that the shooting of Premier Stolypin at the opera house on Thursday night by Dimitry Bogroff would result in anti-Semitic massacres throughout this district, which is already notorious the world over for its slaughters. There is a large force of Cossacks in the garrison here who, at the first command, would sweep through the ghetto, slaying men, women and children with barbarities too terrible to mention.

According to early bulletins, Premier Stolypin was resting easily, although he was feverish and his pulse was still high. Hopes were entertained that he would recover from his wounds, although he was not out of danger when the statements were made at the hospital.

Several telegrams of inquiry were received from the Czar who had departed for hill last night for Koreten where he was to take part in the dedication of a cathedral police. The royal guard which accompanies the czar outside of the capital had been increased threefold.

Rivals Plot in Fiction.

As the police inquire deeply into the Bogroff affair their investigations reveal a cabal of such interesting magnitude as to rival a plot in fiction. No writer ever conceived the name and counter maze of intrigues in which Bogroff figures.

Bogroff, an orthodox Jew, a lawyer and graduate of Kiev University, played recountenances against the government with consummate skill. Bogroff has a long criminal record but his arrests were always contrived by himself so as to throw off suspicion and prevent his acts from assisting his relations with the government. Bogroff probably has a wider knowledge of Nihilism than any other man alive. If he were disposed he could tell of plots which are brewing now in the dens of law-prating anarchists.

Manacled and heavily guarded, Bogroff is now held a prisoner in a fortress here. It was reported to-day that he already had been executed but this report was not accredited.

The most likely resort as to Bogroff's fate is that he was tried by court martial and doomed to death. Vladimir Bogroff, a brother of the assassin of Premier Stolypin, who was arrested in St. Petersburg last night, is said to be a active Nihilist, and will probably be transported to Siberia.

Designs on Czar's Life.

Czar Nicholas manifested great concern for the condition of his prime minister and sent a message after him at frequent intervals.

Stolypin is a man of determined nature and is confident that he will recover. He iron will may pull him through even the medical skill is of no advantage.

The wildest excitement reigns here. Scores of secret police have been imported from St. Petersburg to ferret out the secrets of the plot in which Bogroff played the killing role. It has been definitely ascertained that Stolypin was not the only marked man in Kiev. Bogroff has admitted that and it is believed by the police the prisoner confessed that there were designs on the life of Czar Nicholas.

TAKES POISON IN EAST BOSTON HOME

George P. Fowler, thirty-nine, was found by his wife, early to-day, unconscious on the floor of the dining room in their home at No. 201 Havre street, East Boston. Near him were papers which had contained oxalic acid powders, and at the East Boston Relief Hospital the physicians said he was suffering from oxalic poisoning. The police say Fowler attempted to commit suicide, but for what reason is not known. His condition is serious.

BOY'S HAND CUT OFF.

MRS. LASSEN, WHO PREFERRED JAIL TO BAIL BY HUSBAND

MRS CATHERINE LASSEN

LASSEN FILES DIVORCE SUIT

Victor Lassen, the inventor, filed a suit for divorce from his wife, Catherine, in the Norfolk County Court in Dedham to-day. It was stated at the court house in Quincy by Attorney Guy Hibbs, who is counsel for Mr. Lassen.

Mrs. Lassen was held a week ago by Judge Avery in $3000 for a hearing at Quincy to-day on the charge of assault on her maid, Wilhelmina Deandelis, in her home on Broad street, East Weymouth. Refusing to give bonds, Mrs. Lassen remained in Dedham jail until yesterday. Before her case was called to-day Attorney J. J. McAnarney, her counsel, and Attorney Hann held a conference with Judge Avery. It is understood that Attorney Hann told the court of the filing of the divorce plea.

Meanwhile Mrs. Lassen, who is sixty-one years old, sat in the courtroom while her eyes damp with tears.

"I did not ever strike my husband," she said. "We have been married for thirty-six years and I have always been a loving and devoted wife. I do not think the few of his kind will let my husband put away a wife who has been his helpmate for all that time.

"We were very poor when we came here from Denmark thirty-one years ago. I was a good enough wife for him when we were in poverty, and I encouraged him always in working against the success which made him rich. When we were poor, my cooking suited him. Now he says I can't cook.

"I shall fight his divorce suit, and I shall see him for separate maintenance. I have tried to make him a good home.

It was expected in the Quincy court house to-day that when Mrs. Lassen is arraigned again on the assault charge that the case will be continued.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA REPORTED SAFE

The American Baptist Missionary Union has received this cablegram from Changking: "Suifu missionaries arrived safely and well at Changking. Rioting missionaries are en route. ## EARLE AT HOME WITH 3D WIFE

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Ferdinand Pinney Earle and his third wife, having outlasted their pronoced bonemoon tour of the world, are at the Hotel Marie Antoinette, visiting Mrs. L. J. Earle, the artist's mother. Earle and his wife, who was Miss Dorothea Elbert Stewart of Worthington, Eng., journeyed to Earle's home at Monroe, N. Y., upon their arrival from Europe, and then registered at their hotel here. The passmaster in affinities has grown a goatee since leaving these shores.

Earle and his bride jogged around town for about an hour and then entrained for Monroe. Just before the Erie train pulled itself out of the Jersey City station Earle sent this telegram to Frank L. Rogers, who chaperons the Mounts livery stable:

Meet two on mill p m. train.

S. G. BAILEY.

Frank told Bill this at 4 o'clock, but Bill and meet the train. Bill was obedient and when the train decided to arrive he was on hand.

Earle climbed out of a day coach, carrying an immodeling. He wore a Panama hat and a black string around it. Bill recognized him and greeted him. A young woman, twenty-one, tall and attractive, followed Earle, but she said nothing to him and he paid no attention to her. She got down and stood up the first coach.

A group of Monroe citizens, who were busily engaged in loafing around the station, perked up when Earle alighted.

"Gee! they chloroused, there's Pinney home again. Let's get a rifle at the next affinity."

Earle looked around. Mrs. No. 2 was far up the street, but that didn't make any difference for they didn't know her anyway. Bill turned to Earle.

Mrs. Earle Walks. He Rides.

"Your telegram said two," he remarked. "Where's the rest of the party?"

"I'll tell you later," said the poet, "with the unmodeling. Drive me up to my new house. Wait a while. Mrs. Earle is when we reach the schoolhouse."

The schoolhouse stirred Bill, and they traveled. Some of the curious townsfolk followed the carriage for a block and then retired. The couple kept on. Earle did not look backward nor forward.

The schoolhouse is about half a mile out from the station. The house went slowly and when the building just ran Mrs. Earle arrived there. She was assisted from the carriage by her husband.

"Tom's grown quite since I've been away," said Earle. Bill unpinned his jaw. There was a silence all the rest of the way. The distance to Earle's castle on top of a hill is about three miles. The other three miles Earle never seen it because he expressed admiration.

Earle rang the bell. The door was opened and there stood a beautiful woman, who had turned the knob, almost immediately.

"Goodness me," she cried, "I didn't know you were the minstry."

The affinity man admitted that he was the minstry, surprises and ignorance of that fact to the contrary notwithstanding. Then he said:

"Mrs. Durland, let me introduce my wife. Dorothea, this is Mrs. Kellogg Durland, wife of the noted magazine writer and lecturer."

Mrs. Durland didn't know just what to say, but she said, in that mood in which she was when Earle called at the house a check was written out and handed to Bill and Bill went on his way.

The Durlands leased the Earle castle through an agent. They intend to stay through the Summer and Fall. Mr. Durland is in this city. Mrs. Durland was asked concerning reports of matrimonial complications for the Earles that might

LYNN MAN STUMPED BY POLICY RAID ON HIS WOODEN LEG

Lynn police declare they have seriously crippled the policy gang in that city by their raid on the wooden leg of John W. Moran, who they also assert is completely stumped by the occurrence. When Moran was searched at the station they drew from his wooden padding between his real thigh and its timber extension slips, manifold sheets and other paraphernalia of policy.

"Buck" O'Brien, the Red Sox "find," will be on exhibition this afternoon when the Sox and Naps line up at the Hunting-ton avenue grounds in the opening battles of the season's windup in Boston.

O'Brien, who stead the world champion Athletics on their heads and pulled a game out of the fire at Washington, is slated to pitch one of the games this afternoon.

A brigade of Brockton fans came to Boston to-day to see O'Brien's first appearance here in big league company. They were armed with all sorts of rooting paraphernalia.

For the first game Stovall expected to use either Blanding or Falkenberg. Donovan had the word from Collins and Speaker for one contest, but expected to have some experience if his men gathered a comfortable lead. Wood has been home all the week, resting up for the final games and he is on edge.

The double-header is slated to begin at 1:30 o'clock and it looked as if the Red Sox with new men in the line-up and new owners and management in prospect, would have a great crowd of hungry fans in the stands for the opening engagement.

The Sox will complete the season's schedule with Cleveland on Monday and Detroit will open a four games series Tuesday and St. Louis will be here for the last three games with the Sox be-ginning next Saturday. Chicago follows with four games on the card. Then the Red Sox go over to New York for a trio of contests, returning to Boston October 5 to face the Senators in a three days' windup of the year.

HUNT FOR SLAYER IN BOSTON

The State police began an investigation to-day into the murder of Mrs. Pasquale Grannetta, who was slain at her lonely home in Cliffandale, in the Saugus woods, yesterday. The woman's husband, who had been arrested as a suspect, was released in the Saugus court to-day, and an autopsy was performed.

Several State detectives were immediately assigned to the case, and they are now carrying on their search for the murderer in Boston. Following the clews that a man answering the description of the stranger who was in Saugus about the time of the crime was seen in the North End, the State police are confident of nailing up his trail here.

Surgeons who performed the autopsy declared that no bullets were found in the woman's body, and they believe the assassin did his work entirely with a stiletto. The body had been hacked seven times near the heart, twice on the face and once in the right side.

Robbery Was Motive.

The autopsy was performed on Assistant Associate Medical Examiner Herbert Newhall of Lynn, assisted by Dr. Thomas P. Perkins, the undertaking rooms of H. N. Bisbee in Lynn.

Among to-day's developments was the finding of $12 of the stolen money. This amount had been left under a lamp. There is $85 still missing.

The woman's husband is a necessary week over the murder and his arrest. When he was taken before the Saugus court he declared that he believed robbery was the motive for the crime, and that it was no Black Hand outrage.

"I'm almost sure that the murderer was not acquainted with my wife," he said. "I know of none of our friends who visited us whom I could suspect."

Upon recommendation of Chief of Police Charles O. Thompson the husband was discharged.

The investigation by the State police is in charge of Deputy Chief George C. Neal of Lynn, Officer Arthur G. Wells of that city and several other members of the force were assigned to interview residents of Saugus in regard to the report that a stranger was seen in the street the time of the murder.

Follow Boston Clue.

Following the practical exoneration of her husband by the alibi made in Greater Boston and particularly in the North End, for the stranger who was seen near the house.

Robbery was undoubtedly the motive of the killing, as the Grannettas were known to have nearly $100 hidden in their house, and a search of the house since the discovery of the crime revealed a number of letters and bills in the property and several business papers strewn about the floor. No one saw the woman attacked, and the first known of the crime was when Mrs. Grannetta staggered to the home of a neighbor and fell dead on the piazza.

Persons living in the locality have told the police of a man seen acting suspiciously some time after the woman was slain and he is being sought. He is described as being five feet four inches in height, weighing 150 pounds, wearing a black cloth hat and a suit of dark clothes. Those answering this description was seen running from the woods by Mrs. Margaret Geniese, and later he was reported walking swiftly toward Revere. There all trace of him was lost, but it is believed he made his way to Boston.

Mrs. Grannetta had been stabbed ten times. The wounds were inflicted with a dagger-like instrument, and the fierce lunges he made at her with a long knife. An autopsy will be performed to-day.

Husband Presents Alibi.

The police are thoroughly satisfied with the alibi put forth by the husband, and will ask in court to-day that he be released. He told a straightforward story of being at work in Revere all day and this was later verified in all details. He was told of the killing of his wife as he was on his way from work and made a frenzy tried to dash his head against the wall of a house.

From all the police have learned of his incidents immediately preceding and during that followed the killing, they feel certain the person who committed the deed was a countryman of the sinning and either a friend of the woman or one who knew more or less familiar with the household.

NOBLE AND MRS. SUYDAM HIDE

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Frederick Noble, twenty-one years old, son of a Brooklyn physician, whose name has been coupled with that of Mrs. Louise White Suydam since she left the Summer home of her rich young husband, Walter Lispenard Suydam, Jr., on September 5, has admitted that he eloped with the young society matron.

Mrs. Suydam and Noble were discovered in a tiny flat in the Regina apartments, No. 82 West Twelfth street, where they have been staying since the elopement. They are known as "Mr. and Mrs. Noble."

Following the disclosure of their retreat the people kept in strict seclusion. They passed the day behind closed blinds and would receive no callers, neither would they answer telephone calls or telegrams.

Noble, who has previously denied that he knew the whereabouts of Mrs. Suydam, ventured out in the evening. He was accompanied by a short man, who refused to reveal his identity. The two shielded their faces with umbrellas and dashed for Fifth avenue.

Noble Has Picture Taken.

At the corner of Fifth avenue and Thirteenth street, young Noble paused and consented to pose for a moment for the swarm of photographers. Then he bade good-bye to his companion and continued his stroll up Fifth avenue. On the way he talked.

"Well, it's no use," he exclaimed, with a grin. "Come in here and I'll tell you all about it. Then you decide whether I am deserting you." He preceded the reporter into a cafe and leaning up against the bar, made his remarkable admission.

"I suppose I may as well tell you now as some other time that Mrs. Suydam is in Twelfth street, too," he said.

It was learned Mrs. Suydam is financially well off. She drew $20,000 from the Fidelity Trust and Trust Company Bank and from a national bank in New York in which she had an account a few days before she disappeared.

It was rumored that Mr. and Mrs. John Jay White of Bar Harbor and Washington, parents of Mrs. Suydam, were in New York, but they did not, so far as could be learned, make their presence known to their daughter and her youthful "soulmate."

It was learned that Mrs. Suydam does not need to leave her present abode through lack of wearing apparel, as shortly after her arrival she called up Blue Point on the long distance telephone and arranged to have her trunks sent on by express. They arrived next day and were immediately taken to her apartment. There were also to all and they were apparently many.

Does Not Disown Son.

Henry M. Noble, father of the young man, took occasion when seen at his plumber shop, No. 484 Pumpkins street, Brooklyn, to revise the statements alleged to have been made by him.

"I never had any intention of disowning Freddie, as has been stated," said Mr. Noble. "He is a mere boy and what he has done cannot be remedied at the present time, but when the whole thing blows over it ought to be a lesson to him."

It was impossible to learn definitely what either the young woman's husband will take now that his wife has been located. Close friends say that he will be willing to take Mrs. Suydam back and treat the whole affair as an unhappy episode in their married life provided Walter L. Suydam, Sr., will provide him to pursue his course. The elder Suydam is alleged to have said that Mrs. Suydam could remain away from Blue Point, as she has disgraced an old and distinguished family name. The son hopes that he may bring his father around later, provided he can induce his wife to return.

DANCING AND COURTESY LESSONS AS FIRST AID TO YOUNG IMMIGRANTS

MRS. EVA W. WHITE

Mrs. Eva W. White, head resident of the Elizabeth Peabody House, West End, who believes that teaching immigrants something of manners and social customs of the new country, will do much to aid them in their new environment.

By GERTRUDE L. MARVIN.

Here is something new—a school of Americanisms.

It teaches newly arrived foreigners the little niceties of American customs which the native-born take for granted, but a knowledge of which the immigrant suffers.

You have to be down there among them to realize that there are plenty of people right here in Boston who never sit down together at the table for a family meal, merely snatching food on from the kitchen table to eat it standing. And there are plenty of young girls, dazed by the freedom of this bewildering country, who take it as one of our charming new customs that strange men should join them on the street, or that the foremen at the factory should ask them out to dinner at the end of the long day's work.

Mrs. Eva W. White, head resident of the Elizabeth Peabody house, recognizing the need, has organized these classes, and she says that they are a great success.

Are Quick to Learn

The Elizabeth Peabody house faces the Charles bank gymnasium on Charles street, and is in the centre of the West End through which the ship loads of newly arrived Italians, Hebrews and Austrians still sent over Greater Boston every year. But the West End is their favorite haven for the first six months and often longer. Mrs. White says that it is the most encouraging work in the world because these foreign boys and girls are so eager to learn, so quick to understand and so appreciative of any help given them.

"Manners do count for a good deal," said Mrs. White, "and for ignorance of the ordinary little amenities of life is a tremendous handicap for these strangers at our doors. Industrial training and conditions are very important, but the Stateis gradually providing for them, and I want here in the Elizabeth Peabody house to look out for their manners, and for their amusements.

"These young girls go through a tremendous change in the first year they are over here. You go down to the steamer and watch them filing down the gang plank, dressed in native costume, difficult and retiring.

In Strange Environment.

"They watch them on the street a year later, dressed in the extremes of fashion, covered with flashing paste diamonds and cheap cotton lace. They are merely trying to imitate what they see around them, and they have not the discrimination to choose between the good and bad.

"The trouble is, that they are too suddenly plunged into freedom, though this is not so much in their homes, for there are sections of the West End that are just bits of Russia or Italy transplanted, where they continue all the old customs, and where the older women keep the native dress. But the young girls who go out to work are thrown into an environment of excitement and extreme other girls, over here longer egg them on, there are many influences to break up the family ties. Pretty soon, they begin to feel ashamed of the old father and mother, and to find all their pleasure as well as their work away from home.

"We try to make our classes entirely practical. In teaching table manners, we do not have a waitress, because most of these girls will never have a maid in her own home, but we teach them to sit down together at the table and pass things to each other, for many of them have never known what it is for a family to sit down to a table together to eat a meal.

Teaching the Niceties.

"They just grab food from the kitchen table and eat it standing when there is any. We try to show the girls how to dress in good taste, and we find they are just as quick to imitate the beautiful and simple when we show it to them, as they are to pick up the fause and gaudy from the city streets.

"We teach them how to make introductions, that a young lady should bow first to a gentleman when meeting him on the street, that young people should rise and offer their chairs to older people entering the room. We have them write letters using personal and business forms, and we tell them how they should behave in a business office and what is expected from their employers. Conditions are so utterly different and bewildering over here, that these girls often take it as one of our customs that strange men should address them on the street, and that familiarities should be taken with them.

"The results of this training is often amusing, it makes them so terribly correct, spotless and neat at first, but that soon wears off, and they do show wonderful improvement under this simple practical instruction.

"The big problem in dealing with these hundreds of girls who pour in here every year is to awaken them to the freedom which they find here—the entire absence of restraint. We hope to show that training of the home ties at their first plunge into the whirlpool of the big city.

Eager for Amusement.

"The most difficult phase of their new freedom is their quest for amusements, on the other side, everything is enjoyed as a family. But here, they are busy all day with their work, and the opportunities for recreation at night tend to keep them away from their homes. They go out with the friends found at their work, and there is little chance to keep in touch with the old father and mother, who take to the conditions less easily.

"To meet this need, there should be a strong system of municipal recreation centres. Our present public amusement places are all competing with each other and have no sort of restraint. The very fact of having a recreation centre in a schoolhouse gives it dignity. Chaperones, always present, set a certain standard of restraint.

"If there were enough of these centres they would be attended only by the young people in the immediately vicinity, and the chaperones could soon learn to know all the faces and to discriminate among them.

Dances Are Popular.

"We give several dances down here every Winter, with three or four hundred present, but we never have the slightest trouble with disorder or roughness of any sort. In fact, the dances are very formal affairs, with the utmost courtesy and decorum on both sides. Our dancing classes are exceedingly popular.

"We had about four hundred registered last year, and we had more than six hundred applications. They enjoy the folk dancing, but they always come back to the waltz and two step as the steady favorite.

"Our effort, to sum it up, is to interpret to these girls the true American ideals, to help them to discriminate between the good and bad.

"And the work is most fascinating. There is nothing to pity down in this district. These people have plenty of good, rich blood, and there is no need to worry about them if they are only given an opportunity."

AGED WOMAN ARTIST WINS PRIZE AT FAIR

BROCKTON, Sept. 16.—One of the happiest women in Brockton is Mrs. Mary D. Porter, of No. 884 Center street, who received word in the morning mail that her exhibits of oil and water color paintings had taken first prize at the Weymouth Fair. Mrs. Porter is eighty-four years old, but still retains her eyesight and is very active. The pictures were painted from life during the past Summer.

HUSBAND LOYAL IN SUYDAM CASE

By SYBIL WARNE.

How any woman could leave such a calm, kindly spoken and considerate husband as Walter Lispenard Suydam, Jr., for an affinity who has vanished into the public eye as Frederick Noble has done, is something that psychologists may well pause to study.

Ever since such has had any remarks to make about women he are modulated that he did not understand the sex. I am tempted to remark also that women do not understand each other.

Frankly speaking, every woman is more or less inexplicable—which is a good deal for a woman to admit, for women are accused from time immemorial of lacking frankness as an essential characteristic. Although no one denies they have much to say—and both young and old members of my sex are apt to do things which mere man cannot adjust to the square of reason.

But the case of Mrs. Suydam is certainly unusual even in this age where everything happens.

Before she left her husband she told him with candor, which must have had avalanche weight, that she loved Noble, who is the son of a plumber, more than she did the man who has original rights, which in the eyes of the law make him her lord and master, and in relating this unique episode the abandoned Suydam can speak no more harshly of her than to remark:

Husband Is Loyal

"I will not impugn her integrity. I will not say one word against her."

It is said that the day of chivalry is past, but the conduct of this young and deserted husband implies nothing of the sort. He showed more than manhood, more of the quality that entitles him to the respect of both men and women, when he said that than any knight errant of old who leaped into a pot of wild beasts to rescue a lady's glove, or exposed himself to permanent ivy stinging frostbite rings under her castle window in the chill air of an autumn evening.

"You have been sweet and good to me," said Mrs. Suydam to her husband. "You have given me a happy home and a happy life, but I love him more than I do you."

Now if a woman has a good, kind husband and a happy home, what more can she ask?

Mrs. Suydam has not answered that question but in spite of her recognition of her matrimonial blessings she tucks up her belongings some eleven days ago and her whereabouts are still a mystery.

As young Noble admitted that he met her on the day she fled from home and got apartments for her in a New York hotel, it was surmised he had eloped with her. But Noble suddenly reappears at the office after days of mysterious absence from public view and denies to ran away with the misguided young woman and claims to have no definite knowledge of her whereabouts.

No Harsh Words.

Persons who do not take a charitable view of the circumstances of the case are wondering if the young woman who left a "sweet and good" husband for a man who bored before he met her by dinning into her the happiness of affinity life. The position of the plumber's son are far different in the eyes of the world than those of a young lord.

The man who was deserted simply because his wife permitted herself to be swept off her feet by a stormy, does not demean either himself or her by harsh words about the girl to whom he gave his heart and his name. The most that can be said of him is that he is a fool. He has squandered and his heart torn with anguish, is the simple statement that he is going to see his lawyer. Mr. Suydam's conduct in the matter certainly indicates there is truth in that old saying "Blood will tell." As families go this world try, where we are supposed to look after ourselves, and nothing but the most unbearable cases, the Suydams have been united. They are apparently they are imminently right. They have been bred to consider marriage a matter of love and not a stress. Good manners, stock by this unfortunate adieu of the husband when his wife ran away.

Noble's Chance.

Young Noble stands to run such position before the public. If he loved young Mrs. Suydam and is a real man, he would have earned her against the stings she was risking. He would have told her to go her way and see how she liked home life. He would have parted from her, gone away and seen her no more.

When he returns to the circles in which he has been, despite his shipwreck and all allegations reflecting upon the missing wife and himself. But he cannot deny that he has helped to snatch her fair name and fame. He certainly has not left her in a plight that she must live to regret as pointedly as a woman can regret anything.

ROME MAY ANNUL EAMES MARRIAGE

PARIS, Sept. 16.—It is possible that the marriage of Mme. Emma Eames and Emilio De Gogorza may be declared null by the Catholic Church. This is the statement made by the archdeacon representing Archbishop Amette of Paris, during the latter's absence.

"So far as Mme. Eames is concerned," continued the archdeacon, "everything is perfectly regular. She was authorized to remarry by the Holy Office, which considered her case as falling under what is technically known as the privilege of the Apostle Paul, of which the following is the explanation:

"When a couple marries, when neither has been baptized at the time into the Church and if one party subsequently becomes a convert and finds it impossible to continue living with his or her infidel spouse, the Church may upon a special application, declare the marriage null.

"This, no longer than a month ago, I explained personally to Mme. Eames while in Brooklyn when the latter called on me.

"When the Eames-Gogorza marriage was solemnized here at St. Placide, I fulfilled, as was given to understand that M. Gogorza had never been legally married before. He gave, however, no proof in relation to the effect that his wife had through the marriage ceremony, and if it is correct the question is whether it was a civil or a religious marriage.

"If the ceremony was a religious one his marriage with Mme. Eames would be once annulled; if civil, it will be a matter for the careful decision of the Holy office.

"We are now investigating the case, in which the Archbishop of Paris is personally interested and will report to Rome soon. But no decision of any kind has been made."

Ward's Determined "Flying Face"

This sketch was made from a photograph of James J. Ward, the daring Coast-to-Coast flyer, who is competing for the $50,000 Hearst prize. It was snapped just as he rose from the ground at Governor's Island in the face of a gale. The crowd officers and other experts begged him not to start, and his wife wept in tears, but he shot into the air, stood true to his course until he lost his bearings while fighting the fierce gusts that swept up from the Jersey mountains.

CANVASS MAINE VOTE ON MONDAY

AUGUSTA, Me., Sept. 16.—Governor Plaisted has called a special meeting of the council for Monday afternoon, at which time the official returns of the ballots cast at last Monday's election will be canvassed and Governor Plaisted expects to issue a proclamation.

He said:

"We want to know how the people of Maine stand on certain issues. Some newspapers clerks are doing a wrong work and don't believe the government is as important as to be considered as serious. In the first legislature that acted upon the initiative in Oregon, J. Ward is, Portland, Me., was a member. This was one of the first laws to be enacted there under the initiative. This is not a new thing, and I believe there is plenty of time to canvass the returns without undue haste."

136 Majority, for Repeal.

The official returns, when signed and sworn to, will show, so Adjutant-General Woodbury says, that the vote on the repeal of the Sunday law has been counted in the cities of Waterville and Rockland, the two cities that were missing when the first and Moro Plantation, Aroostook county.

The secretary of state finds that there were complete returns yesterday from the whole country but eight. Mr. Berry has announced that the missing returns will be received in time for the official count. All of the returns are complete except those from the Penobscot river, which are expected to be received today.

The figures for the vote on the repeal of the Sunday law, as compiled by the officials, compiled except Penobscot county, are: For repeal, 46,881; against repeal, 46,745; repeal majority, 136.

Official Result.

If corrections due to the discrepancy in returns, which seems likely to be corrected, as soon as Portland, were made in the Secretary of State's figures it would show a majority against repeal of 305 votes. Secretary of State Berry is ready to declare the result of the election official. Other counties complained of were Aroostook, Knox, Kennebec and Penobscot counties totals.

The figures for the vote on the liquor law officials compiled except Penobscot county are given, giving Cobb 46,881 and 880.

Mrs. Linton M. S. Stetson, head of the prohibition forces, has received a cable gram from Lord Harris, London, England, alcohol congress to congratulate white ribboners on prohibition victory in Maine.

CASCARETS INSURE INSIDE CLEANLINESS

The Millions of Cascaret Users Never Have Headache, Constipation, Biliousness or Sick Stomach.

It is more necessary that you keep your Bowels, Liver and Stomach clean, pure and fresh than it is to keep the sewers and drainage of a large city free from obstruction.

Are you keeping clean inside with Cascarets or merely forcing a purgageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? This is important.

Cascarets immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system the decomposed waste matter and poison in the intestines and bowels.

No odds how badly and upset you feel, a Cascaret tonight will straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your entire family feeling good for months. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

WARD OFF AGAIN ON AIR VOYAGE

Yorkum, chairman of the St. Louis and San Francisco lines; Hudson Maxim, inventor of explosives, and Brig.-Gen. Frederick D. Potts, commanding the Eighth brigade, Governors Island, and Rear Admiral Albert Ross, U. S. N.

Fowler, the first to get under way in the flying machine contest, started on the shortest part of the journey first—the crossing of the Sierra Nevada and the Rocky Mountains. In believing that the first two or two forts would be the most difficult and dangerous with these mountains to climb, Ward him, he counted on comparatively easy sailing for the rest of the trip.

Ward Met Mishap.

In cross wing at 1:37 o'clock Monday afternoon proceeded to Sacramento, ninety miles away, without difficulty, and at 3:30 o'clock rested in the shadows of the Sierra, 5,000 feet above the level of the sea.

His next step was to vault over the mountains, which at that point are 7,000 feet high. He would have to go 1,500 feet higher than that in order to clear the passage. He could confidently Tuesday morning and gradually ascend to the top of the peaks and range. At that point estimated at about 8,000 feet high, he ventured to descend. He found no work and he was obliged to descend.

Ward ascended at Governors Island, New York, Wednesday, Sept. 6. He had mapped out a route to Chicago, following the line of the railroads. He also had allowed time for inspection of the route. He knew how the topography for the first 1,000 miles of the journey. Ward and others have been compelled to use the railroads as guides. This was necessary in order to follow a longer course than could have been followed if he not known the country.

The very fact of following the railroad, however, led to Ward's first difficulties. He became involved in the great mass of engines about New York, and was forced from all of the first day, absolutely lost, until he landed that night at Pittsgrove, N. J.

Ward Follows Railroad.

Foster fell at Towle, Cal., and was slightly injured. His machine was wrecked. The accident happened at a comparatively inaccessible spot and much time was required in assembling machinery and parts to repair his damaged biplane. Foster worked hard, and after about two days was ready to resume the flight. He expected to be able to get safely over the Sierra Nevada mountains.

Ward took a different route. He lost way to cross the continent. He intended that he could make a six-week flight across the comparatively easy part of the flight, he would accumulate no serious mishap would aid him in getting over the barriers of the West. He counted upon learning the lessons of flying on a flight by the time he reached the mountains.

The Boston Floating Hospital has finished its work for the Summer. The hospital gave 18,127 days' service to permanent patients, day patients accompanied by their mothers and well children who were taken on the daily excursions because they were too young to be left at home by mothers who had sick children. The total is exceeded only by last year's figures. The food laboratory turned out 60,135 feedings of specially prepared milk, 9,459 more than last year, and 955 quarts were given to mothers for use of children over night. More than 6,000 visitors were served to meals.

"AFFINITY" EARLE HAS THIRD BRIDE

It was such a surprise—such an unexpected pleasure—a pleasure that she didn't feel she could take advantage of that evening.

Stroll Forth to Call.

Mr. Earle was sorry, very, but he was a practical man. He and Mrs. Earle then went forth with their umbrellas and called on Jonah Brooks, an old friend down near Oxford, about one and a half miles away. Jonah was "hooked to death." Earle was affected likewise. Then the couple said "good night" and went on to call on the Lewis and Short families. The evening.

Then they went back toward the castle, but not to it. Earle used to live in a farmhouse before he wrote so many poems and painted so many pictures that a small building, which he would bring them. He went to this house, of which George Nagle is caretaker, and Mrs. Nagle is a sister.

In the morning, with their umbrellas, the Earles strolled forth to call on the poet's friends. They walked along the country road, just as happy as on the day they were married. Earle came upon his loved ones—this was before she knew she was going to be his—wandering through the woods.

After luncheon they went back to Jonah Brooks's place on foot. Earle did not want to go back to the village of Monroe.

Ward succeeded at Governors Island, New York, Wednesday, Sept. 6. He had mapped out a route to Chicago, following the line of the railroads. He also had allowed time for inspection of the route. He knew how the topography for the first 1,000 miles of the journey. Ward and others have been compelled to use the railroads as guides. This was necessary in order to follow a longer course than could have been followed if he not known the country.

Earle Maintains Silence.

Jonah harnessed up his horse and drove the affinities to the Oxford railroad station. "Dan" Van Etter, the station master, was on hand communing with nature, and his face lighted up when he spied Persky. The affinity man, now become bashful in the presence of this character, didn't blink once. He hopped out, lifted the parasol down and introduced Jim to Dan.

The couple caught the train for this city. The conductor was the only man aboard who remembered that Earle had married Estelle Eschbacher in Utica, was divorced from her in 1908, married Julia Kuttner in 1909, was parted from her by annulment in 1910 and married Dora by special license and Jim. And the conductor said nary a word.

From the Erie station here they motored to the Maple Antelopette and sent up word to Mrs. J. Earle, his mother. Dora and Jim arrived safe and sound. She was glad to hear it, and came down to the lobby. After greetings she took them out to the dining room.

When dinner was over they strolled to a writing table and all three wrote. It was a long letter, and when one was finished it was passed to the other two. There was no conversation.

Simultaneously with the entrance into the hotel of a reporter the Earles started for the elevator. The reporter sent up his card, asking Earle if he could say something about himself, about his wife, about affinities, about the second marriage, about his sudden return from Europe and about his plans. And to all these questions Earle sent down a complimentary reply, which was that he just simply wasn't going to say anything at all.

SPIRITS HOPE OF SHAKERS

TOLEDO, O., Sept. 16.—Eldress Mary Gass of the White Water Shaker colony near Harrison, O., has a letter from Sister Elizabeth A. Sears in which she admits chloroform was administered to Sadie Marchant at her personal request, but tells Sister Gass not to worry, as she believes the spirits will help them out of their difficulty. Sister Sears's letter was written after she and her colleagues had been arrested and released on bond.

Sister Sears's letter reads: "You have probably seen in the papers that Elder Egbert and myself were arrested for giving quieting medicine to our little sister Sadie during the last three days of her life. Whatever was done was to alleviate her sufferings and to make it easy for her to pass out of the body without severe pain, not to take life. As Elder E. had cared for her so much he felt great sympathy for her, desiring to make it easy in the last, and made the mistake of giving her chloroform himself instead of getting a physician to do the business, although he went to the doctor first and got some tablets but did not ask him to come.

Failed to Get Doctor.

"Since the occurrence we have been told that doctors and nurses are doing those same things constantly, but they have the authority, which we have not. We all regret the step, but it cannot be undone.

"Now we can only depend on the good spirits to help us through as they have in other cases. We are almost certain that some one complained to the officers of the law, as no one knew anything about it out of the house.

"Dear Sister, I have explained to you not because it is pleasant for me to write or for you to peruse, but I thought you would want to know the facts, and I think it but just to Elder Andrew.

"We both feel it deeply on account of reports going out to all people, also the expense it will be to pay the lawyers, but Elder E. is trying to be cheerful, as the good spirits encourage him that it will come out all right. If it was not for their administration he does not know as he could live through it, so don't worry about it.

"Your loving sister,

"ELIZABETH A. SEARS."

Called Her "Poor Little Girl."

Elder Barrett founded the Kissimmee colony in 1905, and Eldress Gass nursed Sister Sadie Marchant for nearly two years. The White Water Heads came north in 1909. At that time Sister Sadie was doomed and even then was begging her friends to help her "pass out of the body."

Eldress Gass said: "The poor little girl was always called her a girl, she was so dainty and refined—pleaded with me to give her something, but I would not."

Both Elder Barrett and Eldress Gass are firmly outspoken against the practice of euthanasia, but they defend their Florida colleagues.

"Sadie came in us in Kissimmee nine years ago," said Elder Barrett. "Her home was in Halifax, Nova Scotia. She was sick unto death, but she was hopeful—yes, she was ever hopeful—that she would come to be cured," she said. "Yes, you shall come to be cured—my little lamb. She was wounded to death dying."

Judge Favors Euthanasia.

Judge Charles E. Chittenden, who has taken a deep interest in the Florida case, said today:

"A few years ago I had a little dog to which I was very much attached. My pet was run over by an automobile and one of its legs broken. I couldn't bear to see it suffer so. I went to a druggist and chloroformed the dog. If we out of mercy relieve our dumb friends when we know there is no possibility of recovery, why should not we relieve the sufferings of our human friends?

"I think it is a matter that cannot be controlled by law," continued the Judge. "Could it open up a very dangerous question because mercenary motives might influence some unscrupulous person to take the life of some friend or relative for purpose of gain. It seems to be one of those questions that cannot be governed by hard rules of law. If press reports correctly give the attitude of the simple old Shaker folks it seems as if all they did was through love and tenderness the last service they could render to a friend."

SOLDIERS FEED ETNA VICTIMS

CATANIA, Sicily, Sept. 16.—Military rations were dealt out today to the victims of Mount Etna's eruption which has wiped out the homes and crops of thousands of peasants and villagers. Soldiers are carrying out these relief measures under directions of the war ministry.

The darkness of night is flung over the slopes of the mountain today, the sun being obscured by clouds of black smoke, which continuously roll upward from the crater. The river of lava which is streaming from the hundred fissures continues to increase in volume. Fears are expressed by scientists that the eruption of the volcano is the precursor of a violent earthquake. Earthquakes, severer than those of 30 years have usually preceded serious earth tremors.

Mr. Galvin's Interview with Archbishop O'Connell

PROBLEMS which reach down to the very foundation depths of human society and its conditions as they prevail to-day, both in the Old World and the New, are included in the topics which form the interview given to our representative, Mr. Galvin, by Archbishop O'Connell in New York, on his return from Europe. It will be remitted in to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

While the Archbishop went abroad early in the Summer for reasons of health and rest that were imperative, his eyes were not closed nor was his mind inactive, as he moved about in the places of his transatlantic sojourn.

Standing apart, as only an observant American can stand, from the passions of Old World conflicts, religious and social, as well as militant, he watched closely the daily lives of the people among whom he was living. And from what he saw he drew lessons for the benefit of the people of his own land.

Those lessons and conclusions.

Not everyone will agree with what the Archbishop says—too many schools of American thought are affected by what he advocates—to make unanimous acceptance probable, or even possible. For this is a land of many-minded men and women and agreement to disagree on great issues is one of our greatest characteristics as a nation.

But all who read the interview will unite on one forceful fact, that it is the utterance of an honest mind and the product of a heart filled to the brim with love of our country.

Let each read it for himself in to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

LAURIER WARNS MANUFACTURERS

By WILLIAM HOSTER.

MONTREAL, Sept. 16.—Repeating once more his declaration that he would never be guilty of a crime against reciprocity and he rejected the offer of reciprocity with Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, speaking at Quebec, warned the protected manufacturers against their selfishness in opposing the pact.

"I do not understand why the manufacturers oppose reciprocity," said the Premier. "It is said to be because they are afraid of the future. I would be very sorry to believe that, and up to the present I have refused to believe it.

"The manufacturers would make a great mistake if by their fear for the future they should refuse to favor something which is good for them to-day. I refer to the farmer. What benefits one class benefits all classes. The farmers have a just cause, and therefore are to be aided.

"This is the cause of the farmers, and if the manufacturers oppose it to-day they are preparing for themselves a row which will some day fall across their own shoulders. In any case, whether they are satisfied or not, we will succeed."

Broader Reciprocity.

A clear hint of broader reciprocity with the United States than that proposed in the agreement now pending was also conveyed by Sir Wilfrid in his Quebec speech.

Explaining that the United States had asked for reciprocity in manufactured as well as natural products, and that the request had been refused out of consideration for the Canadian manufacturers, the Premier said:

"In any case we would not make such an exchange without a complete study of the whole question through into the matter.

"It is believed for the moment that such a limit committee in Canada and the United States will follow the successful operation of reciprocity within a year.

Sir Wilfrid delivered a crushing blow at the annexation "bogey."

"I want some one to tell me," said he, "how reciprocity can lead to annexation. There are only two ways annexation can be brought about—by war or by purchase.

"As for the first way, no one has ever proposed it would lead to war. It is a bond of peace and good fellowship. Moreover, a treaty of reciprocity was just signed between England and the United States. I am glad to say that the last subject of French origin that there will be no war between Great Britain and the United States.

Appeals to Passion.

"Then might we be persuaded to allow ourselves to be annexed? Does it follow, think you, that because they want to buy or sell our products we are going to sell them our nationality? I respect the United States, but I am a Canadian, and I could never, to merge Canada, go to such a magnificent country as the United States.

"These are not only my convictions, they are yours, and the fear of annexation expressed by the Conservatives is an insult to our manhood and as false.

"But I have no fear to fight to this campaign more than anything else is not intelligent appeals to reason, but appeals to passion and prejudice.

"If this subtle and odious influence be brought to bear upon the people, then the Tory flagon of poison triumphed once more and the country will be plunged into and race and creed and creed.

"I am not afraid to go before them. But do not fear, we will carry from the Atlantic to the Pacific by a majority in two-fourths of the provinces at least.

"How necessary was the warning Sir Wilfrid delivered in his speech to the effect that the reciprocity agreement is the following letter, which we publish in full, from the Hon. Mr. Fielding, minister of the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce, to the Boston Chamber of Commerce:

"I have the honor to state that if the present reciprocity agreement is not put in force the Canadian Government will be unable to offer to the United States any inducement in the future to secure the removal of the duties which will seriously affect our exports.

"The agreement of reciprocity has been a disastrous effect on the industries and commerce of the United States, in my opinion.

"I write personally to each of our enterprises on this subject, believing that it is their duty to bring the matter home individually to work against and vote against every candidate who is in favor of reciprocity and at the same time to use their influence among their friends for the same object.

"Yours very truly,

"F. W. THOMPSON."

That is the line of argument being followed now to beat the pact. The unexampled boom in trade which has followed the recently announced reciprocity agreement between Great Britain and the United States is the best argument for the pact.

LYNN LOSES TRADE SHOE UNION CENTRE

Shoe workers throughout the United States—there are more than 75,000 of them—are voting to-day in a decision by the general executive board of their trade union removing the national headquarters from Lynn to another city—perhaps St. Louis, Rochester, N. Y., or Chicago. Opposition has arisen against St. Louis because of the unfriendly attitude of the labor forces there. Great Britain and the United Kingdom, the King of England himself.

KATE CLAXTON FIGHTS DIVORCE

ST. LOUIS Mo., Sept. 16.—Mrs. Kate Stevenson, who achieved fame as an actress under the name of Kate Claxton, appeared in the Rue St. Louis City Court today to prosecute her suit to set aside a divorce obtained by her husband, Charles A. Stevenson, in 1901.

Kate Claxton was the star of the "Two Orphans," and her name was a household word throughout the country years ago. She is now almost seventy years old. She charges that her husband went secretly to East St. Louis and obtained a divorce on the ground of desertion and then returned to Parchmount, Ill., where he continued to live with her for several years. She alleges that she knew nothing of the divorce until April, 1910, when he was married at Lawrence to Frances Riley.

RUSTLERS AND CARDINALS PLAY DOUBLE HEADER

BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTS

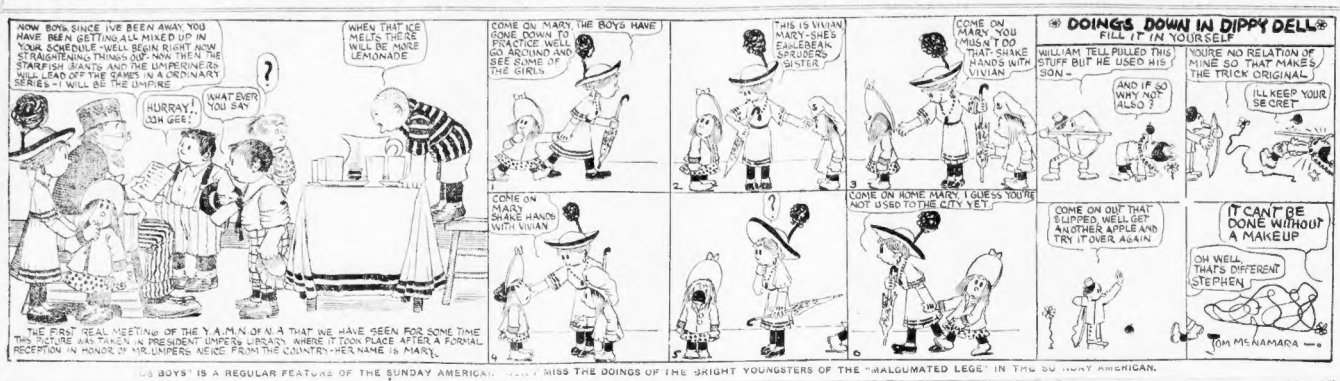
JIM FLYNN HAS EASY TIME DEFEATING THE OKLAHOMA WHITE HOPE

"US BOYS"—Some Folks Ain't at All Like Most Folks — By Tom McNamara

Copyright, 1911, by the National News Association



"US BOYS" IS A REGULAR FEATURE OF THE SUNDAY AMERICAN. YOU'LL MISS THE DOINGS OF THE BRIGHT YOUNGSTERS OF THE "AMALGUMATED LEGE" IN THE SUNDAY AMERICAN.

RUSTLERS PLAY DOUBLE-HEADER

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 10.—The Rustlers arrived in St. Louis this morning after their thirty-six-hour siesta and lost ride from Boston. Five games are to be crowded into nine days, beginning this afternoon with a double-header. It will have been the third engagement day of nine days for the St. Louis fans and no "rubbering" when another team said is programmed. It is needless to say that they will have had quite a few.

Too much is panned in the way most of the regulars are expressing their enthusiasm at the unique manner in the baseball that is being forced upon them.

The presence of the tail enders in St. Louis doesn't mean what it did earlier in the season. Since the Boston aggregation has been strengthened Manager Rossman has come to the front as one of the troublesome in the league for his mind to defeat. More than once this season when the Chicago team expected an easy pennant possibility the Rustlers have crushed their hopes just when they seemed about to take a big lead.

Manager Rossman announced on his arrival that he might inject some of his new talent into the line-up during the double-header. There already with the team and expected to report later are Roy Homer, the big first baseman from the Indianapolis American Association team, who is reported will sign, and Bill Burns, pitcher, whose team Manager Rossman says he looks for the former. Although a pennant is out of the question the Rustlers, Manager Rossman is especially eager to win the series from the Cardinals from now on, while it is in St. Louis. He thinks that by so doing and gaining the fifth victory as left-handers he may be able to land Manager Stallings for the slump in the standing of the St. Louis aggregation.

Breadstuff has a flock of youngsters here dressed in Cardinal uniforms, but with fourth place in sight there is little interest that will be taken in the series with Boston. Breadstuff parts with no star in the series. The field have no other chances is next to the first place in the league, and that is quite far into the future.

Pitcher Doc Scanlon, a right hander from Duluth, reported a month ago, and Catcher Phelps, last Saturday, will be given the pitching assignment today in the one game. Pitcher Sallee, who was signed from Golden, Texas, and George Wheeler, pitcher, Manager Rossman said he would decide Monday or Tuesday.

MILTON HIGH HAS FEW OPEN DATES

The Milton High eleven has a heavy season Saturday, Sept. 30, when the Milton Academy football team on the academy grounds.

The High School team has also a strong team this season, all but three of the last year's players will be on the field, and Coach Hurd, who has been with the team for the past two years, is confident that the prospects are excellent.

Nantasket Steamboat Monopoly Exposed! See Sunday's American

Why a 25-cent fare, instead of 50 cents for the round trip, and an all-year service would be only fair play to the public will be fully explained.

Jeff Should Have Done His Singing Behind a Screen — By "Bud" Fisher

MUTT AND JEFF ARE REGULAR FEATURES IN THE SUNDAY AMERICAN.

Nelson Says $1,000 Belt Offer Open to the Entire World

By BATTLING NELSON.

Greatest of all Champions.

One of my colleagues on a local paper accuses me of pulling a "Press Stunt" by offering that $1,000 diamond belt. I will admit it was a press stunt, but it was one of those that are absolutely on the level. Many a press story I have pulled in the last fifteen years, but up to date, no one has ever found me lacking when it comes to producing the credentials, and this $1,000 belt is no exception.

I figure on giving the lightweight champion a diamond belt I will get more than $10,000 worth of advertising, which will extend over a period of at least twelve months time. At the same time it will be an inspiration for the little boys who follows to box at their local best and try to win the prize.

The winner of the belt would be a Battling Nelson booster for life, for in the west it would be a good thing for everybody concerned.

My colleague also said it would be utterly impossible for Welsh, Dehnert or Conlin to scale in at 110 pounds, therefore I was safe in making the offer. I am positive that Jimmy Conlin can scale in at 110 pounds, in fact he could scale in at 105 and put up the fight of his life.

Open to the World.

The competition is open to the world, not any one particular section, the more entries the better. Of course, it must be boys with class, some that will appeal to both press, public and sporting editor, else it would be a joke, and this offer is made in all seriousness.

Frank Klaus, a pretty good welter-weight from Pawtucket, R. I., was in town yesterday looking for a match with any fighter who would go 10 fast rounds and swap punches with him. During our conversation he said, "What do you think of some of the sporting editors here having so much cold?"

I said, "Why, is it not so?"

No, I haven't even got a girl," said Frank.

A man cannot be a really great fighter unless he has plenty of feminine admirers, and if he wants me for a pal he ought not have any trouble getting a companion for life.

Likes Home Cooking.

Since coming to Boston for the last eight years I met many real nice young ladies, in fact, I have waited for two of them to grow up since five years ago. They are now about twenty—and, oh! how angry I was getting for being rocked cradle.

Some promoter who has an eye for business should grab the Wolgast-McFarland and match before it gets cold. It is the one big attraction of the day.

The Wolgast-K. O. Brown and the Matt Wells-McFarland matches, to my way of figuring, are the money getters for both fighters and promoters as well.

The matches appeal to the public also. The Wolgast-Brown battle would be a legitimate championship match, as both are now 133 ringside, which is the recognized fighting weight at which the title has been won and lost for the past dozen years.

The Matt Wells and "Packey" McFarland go would also be for a championship, but it would have to be for the English Lightweight Title held by Wells. Both cannot make better than 135 at 5 o'clock, and at that weight McFarland would be able to show a little real fighting if he is not a welter-weight.

Ready for Nixon.

Sunday at 3 o'clock in the Armory A. A. I will do considerable boxing with two sparring partners and possibly three, just to give the public an idea of what my condition is for Tuesday night when I step into that ring, strong and ambitious local favorite, Billy Nixon, in the same ring in a real tryout.

I do not generally box more than four rounds while training, but there are so many pessimistic people here in Boston that think it impossible for me to get into shape to come with such a strong, rugged lad as Nixon, that I'll have to show them. They tell me he has a deep propeller that is more certain than a needle.

Nixon is getting rather clever, but I think the one who great things he will do to me when he cross arms on Tuesday.

I should like to make my friends wagers, just to arouse real interest in the match, but I have never been up first—that I lund the first punch—since first blood—that I win by decision—score first and last knock down.

I would not like to do this to make the affair interesting, that's all, nothing more.

I know I am not in the best possible shape for Nixon both being I feel I am good enough to travel a fast twelve rounds, if necessary, after training daily with Mark Conley. For my second bout with Young, which comes off two weeks later, I will show improvement, I hope.

BATTLING NELSON'S BIG FIGHT STORIES.

Battling Nelson, who is in Boston, training for next Tuesday night's battle with Billy Nixon, a bout which may be a stepping stone in the Dane's climb to the top of the lightweight division, will tell fight fans his plans and will give some inside scoop on the pugilistic situation in

THE SUNDAY AMERICAN.

SLAPNICKA BOUGHT BY CHICAGO CUBS

CHICAGO, Sept. 16.—President Murphy of the Chicago National League baseball club yesterday announced the purchase of Slapnicka, the Indian pitcher, who won the Wisconsin-Illinois League pennant for Rockford. Slapnicka will report next week. He has won twenty-four of twenty-eight games pitched this season.

DON'T MISS THE FUNNY ADVENTURES OF MR. AND MRS. DINGBAT IN THE SUNDAY AMERICAN.

WHEN the Katzenjammers arrived at the Treasure Island——

Friend Reader bugs right in here with: "Say, when did the Katzenjammers ever get to that island. They have been sailing and sailing for Sunday after Sunday in the comic section of the Sunday AMERICAN, but they never seemed to get anywhere. When did this island bump into the scenery, anyhow?"

The Treasure Island comes in to-morrow, in the comic supplement. Yes, the Katzenjammers actually do arrive at the Treasure Island—Hans, Fritz, Der Cap'n, Mamma Katzenjammer, the one-legged old sailor and the rest of the crew.

Was there any gold on the island? Well, what do you think?

The things that Hans and Fritz did—say, those kids are the comic limit. But the best thing to do is to wait and let you look at the Katzenjammer doings to-morrow for yourself.

Winsor McCay has a page of new adventures in "The Land of Wonderful Dreams." Fantastic and charming are the stories Mr. McCay tells in his pictures.

"Happy Hooligan" has a whole raft of trouble again. He has a run-in with a gazzunk, which is an awful thing to have happen to anyone—even to Hooligan.

"Jens," the man who carries out orders, is obedient again, with distressing results to the gentleman in the bath-tub.

"Mammy's Lil' Lamb" shows another variation of the pickaninny peculiarities.

The comic section of the Sunday AMERICAN is the funniest thing on earth, and to-morrow's section is a humorous winner.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

OBEY YOUR CONSCIENCE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been keeping company with a young man for six months.

Recently I corresponded with his brother, which, in his opinion, was very wrong.

Now, Miss Fairfax, I see no wrong in corresponding with this young man's brother, and wish you would let me know if I am committing an error.

PERPLEXED.

I SEE no harm in corresponding with this young man's brother. You are mistress of your own actions, and if you follow the dictates of your own conscience you will need the advice of no one else. I think it is the young man who is at fault. He pretends to the advantages of a person engaged without taking the responsibilities which such a position involves. He cannot tie you down in this way unless the contract is willingly carried out on both sides.

A DELICATE SITUATION

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been engaged for the past few months to a young woman. Our engagement has given me an opportunity of knowing her better. I find that we are not at all congenial.

I have given my fiancee every chance to break the engagement, but she does not seem inclined to do so. I always thought a man who jilted a girl was a very mean sort, but I dread to marry this girl, for I know we cannot be happy together.

Now, Miss Fairfax, I am looking to you to advise me. What is your opinion of my case?

M. K.

YOU are quite right. It is unfair to both you and the young girl to marry under these circumstances. You have a difficult task before you. Try to put yourself in her place and think of her as much as possible when you decide to talk the matter over with her. Remember that you are under strong obligations to her, having made her a promise which you are trying to break. Your situation is very delicate, and you must realize how easily you may be misunderstood and blamed.

If you go about this tactfully, helping her as gently and kindly as possible to come to your state of mind, you will be able to accomplish your end without hard feelings toward you.

You must make up your mind that it will take a long time and try to give in to her as often as possible.

This is one of the most difficult circumstances a man can face and the young girl should realize it and help him all she can.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

The Light in the Window

WHEN the first light appeared in the window it is not for the chronicler of the Appleton family to say, but since the night it first twinkled out in the darkness it has been a symbol of the tenderest of home sentiments.

Poets have allowed their hate to go unstrummed while they rhymed about it, and girls wearing a frightened air and skirts of uncertain lengths have put on the tremolo stop while they sang about it, and no one has stopped to consider that there are windows and windows, and lights and lights, and time out one night to look thousand is of the kind to which a sentimental fancy could attach.

Now there's that Appleton family.

A light in the parlor window at the Appleton home means "company," and "company," in quotations, never occupies the father who wants to see Father, or a woman who wants to see Mother. "Company," in quotations, means some one who has called to see Daysey Mayme exclusively.

The light twinkles frequently till late, and means nothing except an addition to the gas bill, but when it shows in the children's room at that hour it signifies sickness and trouble.

A light in the kitchen window at midnight means one of two things. Either Daysey Mayme is foraging for something for her guest to eat, or her mother is standing over the stove mixing up something for the children's croup.

If along about 2 in the morning a light appears, wavering from room to room, it means the light bearer is a wobbly old man, Lysander John. He got up to see what time it was, a habit of those who are growing old, and then wanders all over the house to see if all the clocks agree.

Before he puts out the light and draws his cold feet under the covers he will press an anxious face to the window to see if there are signs of day.

Daysey Mayme Absent

Along about 6 a light appears in the kitchen window that remains till the sun pulls it out, but it is never lighted by Daysey Mayme.

The anxious lights in the window twinkle just as merrily as those that light her in, I object to.

The Gun Runner

TO-DAY'S INSTALMENT

By ARTHUR STRINGER

Copyright, 1909, by B. W. Dodge & Company. Entered at Stationers' Hall, London. All rights reserved.

THERE was something incongruous in the trivial everydayness of that casual knock over the long-distance wire. Yet this half-comic incongruous sound sent a tingle of terror through him. It caused him to turn back to his rugged and ponderous stake of logs, and, lifting one after the other of them until blood dripped from his bruised finger-ends and his head swam as with a vertigo.

He leaped back, suddenly, with a galvanic start, as though the log at which he clutched had been a powder-trail. For close beside him stood the figure of Alfred, ghost-like in the uncertain grayness about them.

"The light's coming," she warned him. "I must help you."

"No—no," he cried, knowing such work was beyond her strength. "You must go on to the car! For God's sake, guard the car!"

"But you can't do it—you can't keep this up!" she cried, in pitying protest.

"Go back to the car . . . . this is my work . . . and I'm going to finish it!"

The Way Open

The maddening thought that a new enemy, this relentless enemy of light, was on his heels, turned him back to his work frenziedly, until his heart sounded like a trip-hammer under his aching breast-bone and his breath, in that rarefied atmosphere, came with short, painful gasps.

He had to resort to his brandy-flask before he could reach the car again. Then he rested for a precious minute or two, pulling to a stitch that he would prop against the empty flat-car's wheel with a log-wood stick, while she handed and tugged at its heavy end with the reversed motor.

It was perilous work, rolling for the last many coulps but one fault of judgment undo all his labor. It was a moment when everything hung in the balance, when one grain of illluck would send the heavy swinging up against them.

But an inarticulate little cry burst from him as he saw the block nose slowly yield and then move inch by inch forward. He heard the grind of the rusty wheel-flanges against the switch-points, and knew that he had won.

Then the operation was repeated, when once the switch had been cleared and the lever thrown over, and again the stubborn car was forced and pushed into motion. When it came to a standstill, it was left resting well off to the left of the switch, on the road to Gunrigh once more open.

Daylight Coming

McKinnon's ears were ringing, and his head still swam a little, as he climbed into the track-motor's driving seat. He noticed, too, as they gathered speed, that he was wet with sweat, and that the cool mountain air was sending a chill into his very bones.

"Look! It's daylight coming!" cried the girl at his side. He peered out through the phantasmal grayness that lightened about them, and a new anxiety crept and corroded through all his aching body.

There would be no appreciable period of friendly twilight. The tropics, he knew, would explode the full light of day on them like a rocket. And between him and safety still lay seven miles of track.

"It will be a long run before we come to the end," he told the girl.

She rolled back, "Yes—I know," as the lever went to the last notch and the car responded and pounded along the uneven rails. The forest fell away, and they came into a more broken country, winding and twisting between bald and rocky hills, past coffee-farms from which early-awakened dogs barked out at them.

But the rugged-hooded car raced and pounded forward, taking the sharp curves with a scream of protest, striking with malignant heels at every jutting switch-point.

Then the light grew stronger; they could see a more open and level country studded with rancho and hacienda, and a crooked, sun-baked road, white with dust, and broken walls, and clumps of stunted trees.

Then the girl gave a cry and caught at his arm.

"Guardspit!" she said, pointing toward the northwest. He had no time to look, for at the same moment his own eyes had caught sight of something which filled him with an even more compelling emotion.

Before the rocky hill-crests toward which they were sweeping he caught sight of a row of smoke columns and the scarred white splashes of tent walls against the yellow-gray of the parched hills. He leaped to his feet as he saw it.

He surrounded the lever suddenly, and turned and struggled with one of the cartridge-boxes on the row behind them. He pulled and tugged and worked it quickly forward, to heighten the barricade on the right-hand side of the car, for he knew they were charging down on De Brigard's camp. He realized that their diminutive mount was at hand, that the time for their last dash across the country's lines had come.

Could See Sentries

Already he could see the pacing sentries as they met and countermarched before the weathered stakades of white. He could see the corraled horses and mules of the brigand's cavalry feeding together. As the car raced on, he could even make out groups of men in ragged uniform, barefooted, squatting about the campfires.

Some of them he could see stooping quickly over black pots, one group was splashing and washing at a long wooden water trough. There seemed something tranquil in the scene, something strangely unlike the way of war in the slowly rising smoke columns, in the slowly moving lance-footed men, in the patches of palm and tree boughs, in the water trough and the tranquilly feeding horses and mules.

Then the scene changed, with the quickness of a stage picture. The cue for that change came with a challenge from a second sentry on guard further along the track's edge. The cry came coupled with that shot.

It seemed to McKinnon like the sudden plunge of a sword through his coherent dot when vitalized with its magnetic current. The sentry, in the meantime, repeated the shot, three times, until the man in the charging car stood up and returned his fire, sharply, driving him to cover.

Fate's Little Jests

HE was a happy-go-lucky man, and, according to his friends, seldom allowed his doubts to weigh heavily on his conscience.

Yet one day he seemed serious and thoughtful, and talked like it.

"You know," he said, ponderously, "there are times in my life when I feel Fate is indeed ironical."

"Do you refer to any particular occasion?" asked the puzzled sport-loving creditor, who was still living in hope.

"Yes—one of them came last week," explained the man quite money fly. "I was down at the seaside, and hadn't a cent in cash. But I had a check for fifty dollars, which the bank wouldn't cash till I proved my identity. And the only person in the place who knew me well enough for that was a man to whom I owed seventy-five dollars."

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS; FINANCIAL NEWS

MARKET STRONG ON PEACE TALK

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Strength was chiefly attributed to the rapidly clearing Franco-German situation over Morocco and gains were made throughout the list at the opening of the market today. Today, as usual, Canadian Pacific set the pace, advancing 1¾ upon its first sales. Among the other gains recorded in the initial sales were the following: Steel common ¾, Steel preferred ¼, Amalgamated Copper ¾, Erie common ¾, Pennsylvania ¼, Reading 1¼, Missouri Pacific ¾, Atchison ¾.

The pressure coming from the side of American securities by German and French houses was greatly lessened, resulting in a marked improvement. Lehigh Valley forged ahead 2 points, while 1 point or more were scored in Union Pacific, Reading and Missouri Pacific to a quarter of an hour's trading.

Various specialties contributed to the improvement, among the strongest of these being Brooklyn Union Gas. Americans were steady in London. The curb opened quiet and unchanged.

MERCHANTS' BANK TO HAVE NEW HOME

One of the biggest improvements in State street property for many years is to be a large up-to-date office building at the corner of State street and Broad, the well known shadowy granite structure known as the Merchants' National Bank Building, to be torn down.

Announcement of this important change was given by Frederick L. Fremont of the Merchants' National Bank, which owns the property, in a notice to that effect to tenant that he must vacate by July 1 next. Mr. Fremont said that the present bank building and the construction of the new building would begin at once.

The new building, it is said, will cost more than $1,000,000.

JUDGE FINES JILTED NEEDHAM MAN $1

Richard W. Jefferson of Needham, was fined $1 and placed under $500 bonds to keep the peace by Judge Grover in the District Court of Northern Norfolk at Dedham this morning, hearing on the charge of threatening Miss Mary E. Harvey of Great Plain avenue, Needham, whom he wooed for a long time. Miss Harvey said that Jefferson had wanted her to marry him, but she could not, as she had lost father and mother to look out for. Jefferson found that she had received more any threats and that the charges were quashed.

ATLANTIC FREIGHT RATES INCREASED

LIVERPOOL, Eng., Sept. 16.—Beginning Sept. 20, all freight rates on Atlantic ocean steamers will be increased ten per cent. Representatives of the companies met together and voted to make the increase.

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

One broker, who covered a line of shorts which had been outstanding for weeks, said he got the stock so easily that he felt he had made a mistake in closing out his trades.

Professionals have not dominated the market on the decline, for they have had their accumulated sales made a considerable volume. It is impossible, of course, to learn if they have put out a bear line position, but it is known that some large covering orders were executed.

During the last year Europe has been taking the copper at the rate of 2,000,000,000 pounds per annum, and it is argued should there be no revival of industry in Europe abroad and no decided increase in consumption in this country a further long period of depression would be the result.

One of the heartiest professional traders said that he had come here on Saturday for the present and he intended to operate on the long side for awhile, believing that there was too much of a following of bigbear tactics on the short side. The Hamptons are talking more hopefully, but apparently doing nothing at all in the market.

The annual report of the Boston Stock Board & Exchange for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, indicates that during 1911 trades, which aggregated 8919,920 were the largest in the company's history, being 832,072 or 5.49 per cent in excess of those for 1910. The company earned 6.22 per cent the same amount on its $850,000 outstanding stock. The total earned 6.22 per cent for 1911 as against 6.21 per cent for 1910. The remainder placed to the fund as 6 per cent bonds in lieu. Operating expenses were $29,479 larger due, in part to an increase of over $11,000 in rental and taxes expenditures. The company's usual quiet dividend policy large amount of cash undisposed because of its several thousand feet of frontage, which calls for regular yearly improvements.

About the only positive argument against a further decline in prices is what has been accomplished already. This has shaken out all the speculative holdings of securities and has put prices on a basis which makes real investment holders consider the possibility of acquiring their strong issues. The leading bankers and brokers though, are not stocks into strong boxes, and it does not seem probable that they would let the market go far enough below this level to empty them completely. It therefore seems the only logical thing.

It is possible that the decline in prices has largely discounted the slackening of production with the crops. One favorable thing that has perhaps resulted from it is that it deserves is the admirable action of the labor unions in refusing to strike on initiation of the railroad compromise.

Another reason for hope is found in the statements to be made by Taft on his return from his six weeks' tour of the country. He will express his policies strong that he will disarm in advance the Democratic attack, will accomplish in Washington next Winter. His decision in favor of Wiley pure food case proves the correctness of his judgment.

There are some who cling tenaciously to the belief that the Canadian Pacific is going to a split on the Erie. Despite the public denials on authority. In support of their belief, the men closely in control say that the Canadian Pacific interests are carrying out the plan through the "Soo." It is pointed out that it was through the "Soo" that the Canadian road acquired its hold on Wisconsin Central and that when this process was going on the Canadian Pacific officers were able to learn as they do in the case of the Erie, that the road was buying the stock. The reason for all its plausibility, was not denied by brothers usually well informed on "Soo" affairs.

Hanson, Stone & Co. have loaned the Rhode Island Coal Company $100,000 on notes due in 1913. This amount Pendleton, Whitney believes will carry the company through the period of profitless production. The bonding debt, outside of the debt to Hanson, Stone & Co., is represented by $1,000,000 5 per cent notes of the company, which are due in 1913 and are redeemable into stock at 10 at the option of the holder.

DEALERS PRAISE WILEY DECISION

The victory of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture, the Nation's "pantelodge" on the pure food question—over his enemies, the embalmed beef, boiled coats of soda, salicylic acid preservative crowd, is hailed today as a real triumph of the people by New England manufacturers, legislators, merchants and State officials.

President Taft's complete vindication of Dr. Wiley, who has been persecuted and harrassed by the interests responsible for the killing of "Americans through the preparation and sale of noxious and dangerous food compounds, is everywhere praised today as one of the most just and far-reaching decisions the President has ever made.

Taft May Now Act.

The retention of Dr. Wiley and his exoneration from the charge of wrongful conduct, brought against him by Attorney-General Wickersham, according to the New England defenders of the pure food expert, make it clear that he will be given a broader control of affairs than he ever before enjoyed, under Secretary Wilson. It is said that when President Taft returns from his cruising around the coast in November there will be some new official faces in the Bureau of Chemistry and Weights.

Previously, so-listed manufacturers of food products who have followed the Wiley-Metcalfe principles closely say, Dr. Wiley has succeeded until hundreds of the cases he brought before the food and drug inspection boards, which are due to the alleged pernicious activity of Dr. F. L. Kilbourne, Dr. Bernhard Dyer, George L. Metcalfe, solicitor of the Department of Agriculture, Hewetter this condition will be changed.

Dr. Wiley is expected to be the final food product man to appear before the courts, and he will determine when the manufacturer is misbranding his goods in pure food laws. As a result hundreds of cases now in the courts against manufacturers containing certain deleterious coal tar products, benzoate of soda, etc., will be thrown out, and already scores of manufacturers doing an illegal business are said to be shaking in their boots.

Senator Nason Talks.

No person in Massachusetts is better qualified to discuss the merits of the Wiley-McCabe controversy than State Senator Arthur L. Nason of Haverhill, chairman of the committee appointed to investigate the subject of cold storage of food, and food products bills in the last Legislature. He said: "The exoneration of Dr. Wiley means that the purifying policy will be protected from manufacturers of food products who have been a source of diminution in the government service of a progressive and able official. The action of Secretary of State Albert P. Langtry was pleased and satisfied with the decision. He declared: "I am very glad to hear it. It is an added thing for Taft to the people, for some time to come, in my opinion."

State Treasurer Elmer A. Stevens said: "I am enthusiastic. He said:

"President Taft's action fully vindicates Dr. Wiley. I believe that Dr. Wiley is not necessary in the eyes of the American people. He has done much good for the public upon the people and faithfulness in handling the great public is well known."

That Dreadful Bogie, "Arraying Class Against Class"

It Seems to Shock Everybody—Except When, as Usual, the Rich Class Is Arrayed Successfully Against the Poor—Then It's All Right

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal-Examiner

How many thousand million times have you heard some solemn, sanctimonious nobody deplore the "arraying of class against class"?

If you say that children under ten years of age ought not to be worked to death in the mills, that is called "arraying class against class," or, still worse, "breeding dissatisfaction among the masses."

If you call a judge who decides that laws cannot protect women or children from night work a criminal and an anarchist—which he is, since he denies the right of law to prevent wrong—you are told that you are "arraying class against class" and "endangering the stability of society."

Here comes a sensible man like Samuel Untermyer, who knows many things that he doesn't say, full of grief because somebody said he recommended "the organization of a labor party as a weapon that labor might use to advantage in its struggle with capital."

Says Mr. Untermyer, with his hands raised and his eyes rolled toward heaven.

> "I made no such suggestion, and am not of that opinion. "Such a course would, in my judgment, be most unwise. It would array class against class. Labor would find itself in a hopeless minority, whilst under existing conditions it will in the end, and as soon as it knows how to use its great strength, be able to exact a fair measure of justice through exercising the balance of power that rests in its hands."

Mr. Untermyer is one of many who think that it would be "arraying class against class" to advise workingmen to utilize the power of their numbers for protection and enrichment.

But nobody ever seems to think there is anything wrong when the very rich use the power of their capital for their own advantage and their increased enrichment.

Nobody knows better than Mr. Untermyer to what an extent rich and powerful men are banded together for the protection of their pockets and the increase of their bank accounts.

Many millions and tens of millions Mr. Untermyer has enabled these big men to get or to keep.

And he knows well how closely united they are when their financial interests are threatened.

In every country it is the same, and in this country more than any other the close organization of wealth against the rest of the population is intensely developed.

Organization of monopoly, organization of bribery, organization for the control of courts, legislatures and all public officials—these are features of that close combination which great wealth has organized for its own protection.

But nobody seems to be worried by THAT particular "arraying of class against class."

Wealth may organize itself and organize all its powers for its own protection and for the exploitation of poverty. That, in our system, is called wise, conservative business judgment.

It is only when some one suggests that what the rich do with their dollars, the workers should do with their numbers and the power of numbers, that the bogie of "class against class" is brought out and paraded with dismal howls.

In spite of the howls, and the "class against class" drivel, sooner or later a majority of the people WILL organize in some way to overcome the power of the majority of dollars. And when that happens, we shall have the beginning of democratic government in the United States, taking the place of corporate and financial government, which is the kind that we know now.

Could anything, by the way, be more amusing than good Mr. Untermyer's statement that if the workers should organize themselves in a party, "labor would find itself in a hopeless minority"?

Considering that labor, of one kind or another, makes up at least ninety per cent. of the population of the United States it is humorous, and worthy of the ablest corporation lawyer, to suggest that labor united would be in a hopeless minority.

With intelligent labor intelligently united, for intelligent, honorable action, organized dollars would find themselves in a hopeless minority, and Mr. Untermyer well knows that.

What labor—those that work for what they get—needs most at present is more solidarity, more knowledge, views of public affairs extending beyond the dollar and a half or three dollars and a half that the individual gets.

And another thing that labor needs is to get for itself in some way the services and the genuine. SINCERE ADVICE of such clever men as Samuel Untermyer.

The body of the people will be better off when their interests are protected sincerely and earnestly, and permanently, by the men of great ability now nearly all enlisted in and proudly wearing the uniform of the great American army of organized money.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

IN DEFENCE OF DOCTORS

Editor AMERICAN:

The article written by Mrs. Wilcox would give joy people the idea that medicine, as it is practiced to-day, is an entirely disorganized profession. This is not so, and the error that she has cited she does not sufficiently to merit her condemnation.

Her statement that "the knife slipped," causing the death of the child, is unusual, to say the least. The death of a child following an operation for removal of adenoid growths is rare.

I am sure that were the facts put before the writer of the article in the proper way, her ideas regarding carelessness and bungling in that particular case would be modified.

Mental suggestion is of value at times; in some cases it is of considerable value. But when we see that after years the majority of these professional mental healers with their ideas of treatment, are losing supporters, and when we see that they are beginning to disagree on the actual limits of medicine, and even declaring that the hitherto established conditions by mental healing, then it is high time their claims were tested from themselves, and prosecution of such unscrupulous persons begun.

H. B., M. D.

IMPROVE THE BASIN

Editor AMERICAN:

Our public park system should be for the people. Let us have less ornamentation and more use for places that, as breathing spots for the people, should be made inviting, not so much by restrictions, but by use, that shall popularize them.

What we should have along the Charles River Basin Park are grass plots that will give shade and beauty to a thoroughfare that is very pleasant, exciting and invigorating. And as on the Public Garden, boats for recreation rifle, on that the people may enjoy the splendor of so beautiful a piece as the Charles River Basin. This is not a dollar during the Summer months, and a half hour's row would do no harm. Make it as it were a Summer resort for those who cannot afford a Summer

25 Cents Is Enough For a Round Trip to Nantasket

The annual insolent sewing up of Hull by the imperious Nantasket Steamboat Company is attracting widespread attention and it is more than likely that the corporation that enjoys the luxurious monopoly of running boats between that town and Boston will receive such attention by the Legislature as will induce it to give some heed to the simple demands of the public

After next Tuesday it will be impossible to come to Boston from Hull or Nantasket by steamer later than 4:20 in the afternoon, and since Labor Day it has been impossible for a person to go from Boston to either place after 6:20 in the evening.

Mayor Fitzgerald, in a vigorous statement to the Sunday AMERICAN, denounces the conduct of the steamboat company as outrageous. The Mayor voices the sentiment of thousands of people who live on the Hull neck of land and who are compelled to bow to the unfeeling mandate of the Nantasket Steamboat Company or patronize a railroad that necessarily reaches Boston in a roundabout way.

Hull has been compelled to submit to the ridiculous transportation facilities because of her meekness and the further fact that public attention has not been focussed on the matter.

As a matter of fact the price charged by the steamboat company—fifty cents to Nantasket and return—is outrageous, and the company should be made to cut that figure exactly in two or be put out of business. Thousands of people are prevented from enjoying the magnificent beach, which is the property of the State, at Nantasket, because they are unable to pay the excessive fare charged by the steamboat company.

The steamboat company claims immunity from the Railroad Commission on the ground that it is an excursion company—a farce on the face of it. If through a technicality of the law this company is able to escape the control of the Railroad Commission, then the law ought to be changed and that as soon as the Legislature gets together.

An end should be put to the impudence of this monopoly. In to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN the truth about this startling condition of affairs at Pemberton, Hull and Nantasket will be printed and it will be mighty interesting reading for everybody who ever went to Nantasket or wanted to go—and, incidentally, to the smug gentlemen who own the steamboats that ply at their own sweet will between Boston and that isolated section.

Un-Moving Pictures

By N. P. BABCOCK

They call them "moving pictures"
Because one seldom stays
In any know locality
Much longer than two days.
But whither it may move to,
The heroine is seen
Maintaining, bold great turbulence,
Her calm, complacent mien.

I've seen her meet a relative
She long had fancied dead
(As will be might be, since they're set
A price upon his head).
Like ghost he stands before her,
With the moonlight in his hair.
Yet all she seems to utter is
A stupefied "Ah, there!"

I've seen the villain seize her
Round her small and supple waist
(Displaying as it seemed to me,
An enviable taste).
She's being kidnaped from her home
To dreadful fate afar,
But o'er the shoulder of the fiend
She seems to say, "Ta-ta."

Again dread fate assails her.
Oh, doesn't she look cute?
The tenement's on fire!
She's without a parachute!
Dare smoke and flame she's carried
By the timely hero cop,
And you hear her ripe lips saying,
"Don't let my back comb drop."

I wonder where they get her,
This shadow flitting through
A thousand thrilling incidents
Without the least ado.
She's called a "moving" picture,
But I verily opine
The person she can more must have
A softer heart than mine.

He Writes About Cousin Emeline

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

MA'S cousin Emeline calm for to see
on last nite, she is vary thin & full. Pa could see she looked like a thin spare. He sed the printers wud understand what he meant.

Ma told Pa that she was glad her cuzzin had calm, bekuss her cuzzin was a poet-ess. You wuddent think dear Emeline was a poet-ess to look at her, sed Pa, sed Ma to Pa.

She looks hungry enuff to be one, sed Pa. Have a fitted lunch on the house, Em. Join as far as you like. We have plenty of cold ham in the house.

Ma cuff does not crave for cold ham, sed Ma's cuzzin. I am a thinker, a follower of the new skool of thought. Cold ham is a thing apart, she cood Pa. It goes good with fresh bred & sum light beer, though, sed Pa. I ate sum of it myself & bavent had the colic since. Tie into it, Em.

Husband, sed Ma, I wish you wouldn't call pore wife's cuzzin Em the first time that you have ever saw her.

She doesn't mind if I call her Em, do you, Em? sed Pa.

I mind nothing, sed Ma's cuzzin. I am one of the few whose minds are above such things as nicknames. My others as our-selfs. That is why I am a poet-ess, I cud think that after me gambling fierce last night. I am beginning to think that he does not like me, sed Pa.

But butchers are not a bit like poets, sed Ma's cuzzin Emily. Butchers are cud never understand a thing like this, for instance, this bustid New Thought poem which I have just wrote. Darkness is nothing, deer, to-night to me.

The glow-worms of my heart all glow for thee.
I cud not love thee more, or tenderer,
If to me you was a sun-reederer.

Isent that perfectly dear? sed Ma.

Yes, sed Pa. It wud be perfekly dear at ten dollars per. Why dont you rite sumthing realy good, Em, sed Pa, if you must rite verses? Why doubt you rite like Mr. Eddy duz?

Merrily we hop along, hop along, hop along.

Of course, Pa, sed, you wuddent have to put much hop into it, but the point I maik is that the only verse worth riting nowadays is the verse that maiks us git a snicker here & thare.

Be that as it may, sir, sed Ma's cuzzin Emeline, be that as it may, I shall always insist that the only true poet that ever lived is that grate tragic poet, Ethelbert Einstein, the grate Russian wich rote:

The kanal, the kanel, the awful knout,
I got eleven stripes about
& then you bet I wanted out.

Then Pa bergan for to yawn & rub his eyes. He asked Ma if he cuddent go out & git sum stuff at the deli-cat-essen store, & Ma shook her hed.

I do not wish to eet, sed Ma's cuzzin. When one lives one seldom cares to eet. I guess you are rite, sed Pa. We see lotes one seldom has the loose change to eet.

Now THAT argument can be settled. What argument? Any old argument. There is a man in Boston who advertises to settle disputes of all kinds. He is ready for all comers. He will give an answer to any question at issue, as his judgment or information tells him. Maybe you would like to take some of your troubles to this man for solution. Try the professional argument settler for a change. The questions this man answers and how he does it will be told in to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

PRESIDENT LOWELL DEFENDS STUDENTS FROM CHARGES OF IMMORALITY

To form a true estimate of college life one must see all sides of it. One must see the man who while earning money to put himself through college is helping to support his mother at home and his sister at Radcliffe. One must see the man who strives ceaselessly to bind his classmates together in a broader and more democratic fellowship.

The American college presents problems grave enough to try the spirit of any one, but a man who joins a college community in middle life, and is brought into close touch with both professors and students, gains a stronger faith in human nature.

Friend Reader butts right in here with: "Say, when did the Katzenjammers ever get to that island. They have been sailing and sailing for Sunday after Sunday in the comic section of the Sunday AMERICAN, but they never seemed to get anywhere. When did this island bump into the scenery, anyhow?"

The Treasure Island comes in to-morrow, in the comic supplement. Yes, the Katzenjammers actually do arrive at the Treasure Island—Hans, Fritz, Der Cap'n, Mamma Katzenjammer, the one-legged old sailor and the rest of the crew.

Was there any gold on the island? Well, what do you think?

The things that Hans and Fritz did—say, those kids are the comic limit. But the best thing to do is to wait and let you look at the Katzenjammer doings to-morrow for yourself.

Winsor McCay has a page of new adventures in "The Land of Wonderful Dreams." Fantastic and charming are the stories Mr. McCay tells in his pictures.

"Happy Hooligan" has a whole raft of trouble again. He has a run-in with a gazzunk, which is an awful thing to have happen to anyone—even to Hooligan.

"Jens," the man who carries out orders, is obedient again, with distressing results to the gentleman in the bath-tub.

"Mammy's Lil' Lamb" shows another variation of the pickaninny peculiarities.

The comic section of the Sunday AMERICAN is the funniest thing on earth, and to-morrow's section is a humorous winner.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

The Light in the Window

WHEN the first light appeared in the window it is not for the chronicler of the Appleton family to say, but since the night it first twinkled out in the darkness it has been a symbol of the true heroism of home sentiments.

Poets have allowed their hair to go unbrushed while they rhymed about it, and girls wearing a frightened air and skirts of uncertain lengths have put on the tremolo stop while they sang about it, and no one has stopped to consider that there are windows and windows, and lights and lights, and that not one light in ten thousand is of the kind to which a sentimental fancy could attach.

Now there's that Appleton family.

A light in the parlor window at the Appleton home means "company," and "company," in quotations, never describes the butcher who wants to see Father, or a woman who wants to see Mother. "Company," in quotations, means some one who has called to see Daysey Mayme exclusively.

The light twinkles frequently till midnight, and means nothing except an addition to the gas bill, but when it shows in the children's room at that hour it signifies sickness and trouble.

A light in the kitchen window at midnight means one of two things: Either Daysey Mayme is foraging for something for her guest to eat, or her mother is standing over the stove mixing up something for the children's croup.

If along about 2 in the morning a light appears, wavering from room to room, it means the light bearer is a wobbly old man, Lysander John. He got up to see what time it was, a habit of those who are growing old, and then wanders all over the house to see if all the clocks agree.

Before he puts out the light and draws his cold feet under the covers he will press an anxious face to the window to see if there are signs of day.

Daysey Mayme Absent

Along about 8 a light appears in the kitchen window that remains till the sun puts it out, but it is never lighted by Daysey Mayme.

The anxious lights in the windows twinkle just as merrily as those that light log in the lower door, but they are seldom lighted and watched by the daughter of the house. She is the one who reads the long-haired poets' effusions about the Light in the Window, and sings songs about the Light in the Window with a tremolo stop turned on, but the mother and the father, who neither recite poetry nor sing, are the ones who have gauged the depths of the sentiment.

At least, this is the way it is in the Appleton home.

TO-DAY'S INSTALMENT

By ARTHUR STRINGER

Copyright, 1909, by B. W. Dodge & Company. Entered at Stationers' Hall, London. All rights reserved.

THERE was something incongruous in the trivial everydayness of that casual rock-row. Yet this ludicrously commonplace sound sent a tingle of terror through him. It caused him to turn back to his ragged and ponderous slabs of logwood, lifting and tearing at them until blood dripped from his bruised finger-ends and his head swam as with a vertigo.

He leaped back suddenly, with a galvanic start, as though the log at which he clutched had been a power-circuit. For close beside him stood the figure of Alicia, ghost-like in the uncertain grayness about them.

"The light's coming," she warned him, "I must help you."

"No—no," he cried, knowing such work was beyond her strength. "You must go back to the car! For God's sake, guard the car!"

"But you can't do it—you can't keep this up!" she cried, in pitying protest.

"Go back to the car . . . this is my work . . . and I'm going to finish it!"

The Way Open

The maddening thought that a new enemy, this relentless enemy of light, was on his heels, turned him back to his work. Frantically, until his heart pounded like a trip-hammer under his aching breast-bone and his breath, in that rarefied atmosphere, came with short, painful gasps.

He had to resort to his brandy-flask before he could reach the car again. There he rested for a precious minute or two, explaining to Alicia that he would pry against the empty flat-car's wheel with a logwood stick, while she hauled and tugged at its lower end with the reversed motor.

It was perilous work, calling for the utmost caution lest one fault of judgment undo all his labor. It was a moment when everything hung in the balance, when one grain of ill-luck would send the beam swinging up against them.

But an inarticulate little cry burst from him as he saw the black mass slowly yield and then move, inch by languid inch. He heard the grind of the rusty wheel-flanges against the switch-points, and knew that he had won.

Then the operation was repeated, when once the switch had been cleared and the lever thrown over, and again the stubborn flat-car was pried and pushed into motion. When it came to a standstill, it was left resting well off to the left of the switch, with the road to Guarigui once more open.

Daylight Coming

McKinnon's ears were ringing, and his head still swam a little, as he climbed into the rock-motor's driving seat. He noticed, too, as they gathered speed, that he was wet with sweat, and that the cool mountain air was sending a chill into his very bones.

"Look! it's daylight coming!" cried the girl at his side. He peered out through the phantasmal grayness that lightened about them, and a new anxiety crept and corroded through all his aching body.

There was now no appreciable period of friendly twilight. The tropics, he knew, would explode the full light of day on them like a rocket. And between him and safety lay seven miles of track.

"It will have to be full speed now—to the end," he told the girl.

She only said back, "Yes—I know," as the lever went to the last notch and the car rocked and pounded along the uneven rails. The forest fled away, and they came into a more broken country, winding and twisting between bald and rocky hills, past coffee farms from which early awakened dogs barked out at them.

But the ramped-bodied car raced and pounded forward, taking the sharp curves with a scream of protest, striking with judgment heels at every passing switch-point.

Then the light grew stronger; they could see a more orderly and level country studded with ranchos and hacienda, and a crooked, sun-baked road, white with dust, and broken walls, and clumps of stunted trees.

Then the girl gave a cry and caught at his arm.

"Guarigui!" she said, pointing toward the northwest. He had no time to look, for at the same moment his own eyes had caught sight of something which filled him with an even more compelling emotion.

Before the rocky hill-crests toward which they were sweeping he caught sight of a row of smoke columns and the serried white splashes of tent walls against the yellow-gray of the parched fields. He leaped to his feet as he saw it.

He surrendered the lever recklessly, and turned and struggled with one of the cartridge-boxes on the row behind them. He pulled and tugged and worked it quickly forward, to helpless the friends on the right-hand side of the car, for he knew they were charging down on De Brigard's camp. He realized that their climacteric moment was at hand, that the time for their last dash across the enemy's lines had come.

Could See Sentries

Already he could see the pacing sentries as they met and countermarched between the scattered splashes of white. He could see the corraled horses and mules of De Brigard's cavalry feeding together. As the car raced on, he could even make out groups of men in ragged uniform, barefooted, squatting about the campfires.

Some of them he could see stooping quietly over black pots; one group was splashing and washing at a long wooden water trough. There seemed something tranquil in the scene, something strangely unlike the way of war in the slowly rising smoke columns, in the slowly moving bare-footed men, in the ranches of palm and tree boughs, in the water trough and the tranquilly feeding horses and mules.

Then the scene changed, with the quickness of a stage picture. The one for that change came with a challenge from a second sentry on guard further along the track edge. The camp changed with that shot.

It seemed to McKinnon like the sudden change that swept through his cohered dust when vitalized with its magnetic current. The sentry, in the meantime, repeated the shot, three times, until the man in the charging car stood up and returned his fire, sharply, driving him to cover.

To Be Continued Monday.

Fate's Little Jests

HE was a happy-go-lucky man, and, according to his friends, seldom allowed his debts to weigh heavily on his conscience.

Yet one day he seemed serious and thoughtful, and talked like it.

"You know," he said, ponderously, "there are times in my life when I feel Fate is indeed frolicsome."

"Do you refer to any particular occasion?" asked the longest-suffering creditor, who was still living in hope.

"Yes—one of them came last week," explained the man who made money fly. "I was down at the seaside, and hadn't a cent in cash. But I had a check for fifty dollars, which the bank wouldn't cash till I proved my identity. And the only person in the place who knew me well enough for that was a man to whom I owed seventy-five dollars."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

OBEY YOUR CONSCIENCE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been keeping company with a young man for six months.

Recently I corresponded with his brother, which, in his opinion, was very wrong.

Now, Miss Fairfax, I see no wrong in corresponding with this young man's brother, and wish you would let me know if I am committing an error.

PERPLEXED.

I SEE no harm in corresponding with this young man's brother. You are mistress of your own actions, and if you follow the dictates of your own conscience you will need the advice of no one else. I think it is the young man who is at fault. He pretends to the advantages of a person engaged without taking the responsibilities which such a position involves. He cannot tie you down in this way unless the contract is willingly carried out on both sides.

A DELICATE SITUATION

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been engaged for the past few months to a young woman. Our engagement has given me an opportunity of knowing her better. I find that we are not at all congenial.

I have given my fiancee every chance to break the engagement, but she does not seem inclined to do so. I always thought a man who jilted a girl was a very poor sort, but I dread to marry this girl, for I know we cannot be happy together.

Now, Miss Fairfax, I am looking to you to advise me. What is your opinion of my case?

M. S.

YOU are quite right. It is unfair to both you and the young girl to marry under these circumstances. You have a difficult task before you. Try to put yourself in her place and think of her as much as possible when you decide to talk the matter over with her. Remember that you are under strong obligations to her, having made her a promise which you are trying to break. Your situation is very delicate, and you must realize how easily you may be misunderstood and blamed.

If you go about it tactfully, helping her as gently and kindly as possible to come to your state of mind, you will be able to accomplish your end without hard feelings toward you.

You must make up your mind that it will take a long time and try to give in to her as often as possible.

This is one of the most difficult circumstances a man can face and the young girl should realize it and help him all she can.

"THE WORLD HATES A BOASTER."

"The more you talk about your immature projects the less likely you are to bring them through," says Herbert Kaufman in his inspiring article entitled

Desmond, although a villain, appears to have a little the best of it in this affair. He is in charge of the heavy road roller and Claude is helpless in the grasp of some Gomgots. Heaven only knows what will happen to Claude.

Observe how Desmond, the Great White Villain, forces Rosamond to occupy the front seat of the steam roller, which in no way—she thinks—will prepare a death for Claude, the true lover of our beautiful heroine—Rosamond.

Now you see what the fiendish Desmond was plotting. His heavy steam roller has cut a trench through the swamp lands, and there Claude lies out of sight. In a moment the roller will crush the life out of Claude.

Observe the water rats which have been disturbed in their swampy retreat. They are scared and are doing their best to burrow to safety. They come in large numbers and Claude sees in them a means of escape.

The burrowing rats have brought on an eruption of water and the helpless Claude is slowly but surely forced to the surface. In this position the steam roller cannot do anything against him and our hero is cheerful.

"I'm the boy!" cries Desperate Desmond, "and the water rats will get Claude!" It sure looks as if our hero's time was about to end, but you never can tell. Maybe in Monday's paper there will be a different story.

Where to See Yourself

By DR. FRANK CRANE

"LOOK out, not in," was a favorite saying of Edward Everett Hale. The reasonableness of it is heeded by few. That when you look out you can see something, and when you look in you can see nothing.

Outside are the sun and trees and sky and people. Inside is a deep, dark pit.

You cannot see yourself by looking within yourself. There never was a bigger humbug than this same self-examination, self-study, self-culture, self-improvement, and the like.

The way to ruin your watch is to tinker with its insides; the way to ruin your crop of beans is to dig them up every day to see how much they've grown, and the way to ruin your body and soul is to think about them. "He that saveth his life shall lose it."

Whether or not you believe in Christian Science, at least reversed Christian Science is true. That is to say, if you want heart disease, lie awake of nights and listen to your pulse; if you want stomach trouble inject your thought regularly into your stomach; if you want a bad looking mouth keep fixing it and screwing at it, and if you want any menace, gland or organ of your physical frame to go on a strike and begin to act up, give it a good dose of self-consciousness, so that I say that, whether or not your thought can cure anything, it can certainly give you anything in the way of disease.

True of the Soul

The same is true of the soul. There is no recipe infallible for giving you the multitudes and the moral pip and the spiritual colic as to keep prying into yourself. Analyze all your good motives and pretty soon you won't have any. Suspect your good impulses, and they will soon wither and die. Go around in your soul with a dark lantern, like a Sherlock Holmes, and before long all your decent, self-respecting, manly elements of character will get disgusted and move out.

The one sensible, moral and religious thing to do with yourself is to let yourself alone.

The place to see your real self is outside. There are mirrors all about you in which you can see your soul if you wish. I will name some of these.

First, if you want to see how good you are, look into the eyes of the one who loves you. Cheer up! It's true. You are as good as that.

If you want to know how mean you are, listen to your enemies, those who envy you and hate you. Be humble! It's true. You are as bad as that, too.

If you want to see what you amount to look at your work. The psychological function of work is to reveal a man to himself. When Wagner had finished a part of his "Tristan und Isolde" he wrote: "As the good Lord said some four thousand years ago, when He had made the earth, that it was good, having no one else to say it for Him, so I say of this work of mine, having no one to praise me, 'Richard, you're the dickens of a fellow.'" That was proper, sane and reasonable self-appreciation.

If you've never done anything, in all probability you are nothing.

The Soul's Mirror

If in this reaction of our effect upon ourselves that is revealing. The actor is as motivated by applause, it is such wine and music to the soul, simply because it is his soul coming back to him.

The whole universe is but the soul's mirror. Look up at the stars, you are as great as that. Watch the ocean, there's something in you that rolls as majestically as that. Observe the mountains, your spirit is even as awful and towering. Listen to the storms, they are but pictures of your inner blasts and furies. Do little children appeal to you with their innocent joy? You are as good as they seem. Does the sweet moonlight asleep upon a bank entrance you? It but reveals the fair glory of your own spirit. Do you shudder at waste deserts, black gorges and volcanoes, and do you see crimes and vile thoughts and deeds? Something within you is like that also. You are what you see.

"I sent my soul throughout the Invisible,
Some secret of that after life to spell.
And by and by, my soul returned to me
And whispered: 'I, myself, am heaven and hell!'"

IN THE DARK

"And did you really go into Rome?" asked a guest.

"I really don't know, my dear," replied the hostess, just returned from her trip abroad. "My husband always bought the tickets."

PART ONE.

JOHN MARTINDALE crossed the graveled quadrangle of the Cathedral Close with a quick step, the wind warm and balmy for February night, now inflated his surplice, now wrapped it about him like a shroud. At the archway leading to the short street where he lodged he stopped and looked back at the cathedral; the waning moon picked out the velvety denseness of its great mass with fine lines of silver. It was so he had loved to see it, silhouetted against the soft grayness of the sky; he was glad that this would be his last impression of it.

Perhaps, as he stood there, wrapped about by the wind and the silence, his lips moved in prayer, for his heart was very full. The valedictory service, with its fervid, emotional hymns, had keyed him up to a mood of nervous exultation. Whatever of human suffering his sacred heart may have known, certainly as he stood there now he did not for a moment regret the determination that had led him to volunteer for missionary service in Cambulu—the fever stricken and shunned death trap of the C. A. M. S. Even the thought of Cicely Weigarth, the woman he loved, who was to be his wife, if God willed his return after five years' service, did not cast a shadow on the eager joy of self-sacrifice. From the fever swamp, where seventeen thousand souls waited for light, the cry had gone up "Come over and help us!" John Martindale thanked God he had had the ears to hear His voice.

He turned and hurried on. Tring would be waiting for him. Good old Tring, the best friend a man ever had. Tring was the dearest fellow in the world, for all that he had such odd ways of putting things. Martindale smiled, remembering his friend's comment when he first told him that he had volunteered for missionary service.

"And they've accepted you? They must be mad, Jack. There will be trouble with the heathen before you've been with them a month. You've got a touch of the savage in yourself, you know! You're one of heaven's misfits—obviously you were intended for a pirate, not a parson! You belong by right to Elizabethan days, when your buccaneering instincts would have been called patriotism; now the fashionable name for them's imperialism—you infernal young religious zeal!"

Admired Photograph

Conrad Tring, in the dimly lighted study, stood examining the photograph of the girl his friend was to marry. He studied her delicate, ecstatic type of beauty intensely, that he had once heard a supercritical woman describe as "too pretty, like the most hackneyed of Botticellian Madonnas."

He set the photograph down hastily as Martindale came in.

"My dear chap, I saw your brown phiz in the cathedral and the sight hacked me up wonderfully. Sorry to say you're going, but that excellent bishop!" Martindale cried. Removing his hood and surplice, he came over to Tring's side, a tall, slim figure in the cassock. "Hard luck, Tring! Plans changed again! I've got to leave by the midnight train instead of to-morrow. And I haven't seen Clemency yet—only had time to send her a line after the wire came."

His manner and voice were singularly boyish. In the light of the lamp his face showed somewhat in contrast to them—a masterful face, clean cut and olive-skinned.

"To-night? Why?" Tring asked. He was rather an ugly man, or perhaps, his plainness was accentuated by contrast with the other's good looks.

"Yes. Mrs. Saxe has wired for me. She's ill and wants me to help to get her off."

"Oh, confound Mrs. Saxe—you can't go to-night."

WHY YOU SHOULD NOT FRIGHTEN CHILDREN.

Fear is one of the most primitive instincts of animal life, says Dr. Boris Sidis in an article reprinted from the Journal of Abnormal Psychology in

SUNDAY'S AMERICAN.

Pimples on the Face

Women and girls are particularly liable to these troubles. Cadum, the new remedy, causes pimples to dry up and disappear. Cadum contains an extract from the well-known tree Juniperus Oxycedrus, which has a wonderfully soothing and healing effect when the skin is inflamed, irritated or diseased. From the first application distinct improvement is noticed, Cadum should be tried for any skin trouble. It quickly acts upon acne, blackheads, blotches, sores, eruptions, roughness, chafings, etc. 10c and 25c, at all druggists.

"Needs must, I am afraid. Mrs. Saxe is a person to be propitiated. You see her husband is more or less a little tin god out there, with immense power to help or hinder my work. The secretary of the C. A. M. S. is keen as knives. I should like to make friends with her. He went to no end of trouble to engineer things so that I should travel out with the lady."

To Join Husband.

"What's she like, this Saxe woman? It may have been fancy, but Martindale felt an antipathy in the question.

"Haven't the ghost of an idea," he said. "A bit of an invalid, I fancy. She's been traveling in Europe for her health and is going out to join her husband."

"And why should this invalid wife of a millionaire suddenly find herself so stranded that she must appeal for protection to the humble missionary? I should decline to go, Jack. You owe it to Miss Westgarth."

"Clemency will understand that I am not acting from any selfish motives," Martindale interrupted, with a touch of irritation. "The work must come first."

"The work." Tring pushed a smoldering block of coal with his foot savagely. It broke and spurted into flame. "My good-ness! You make me sick with your cold-blooded talk, the work. We are giving up five years of your life—and a woman's happiness—to it. The odds are more than equal to your seeing the end of the five years, and——"

Martindale laid his hand on his shoulder. "My good grumbler! Don't be afraid—I shall come back. It's not the end that kills men; it's their detestable self-indulgence and drink. And as for Clemency, I am glad that our farewell must be unexpected and brief."

"Don't be too self-righteously contemptuous of the climate, my friend," Tring said. "It's the climate that drives men to drink and to other unspeakable madnesses where they would be ashamed to dream of it in England. You will understand when you come back—for the man who returns after five years of primeval solitude is a very different individual from the smug, cut-and-dried automaton who went out from this far-too country of ours, I can tell you that."

Felt Curiously Stirred

He ended on an almost violent note. Martindale felt curiously stirred and shaken.

"That is inevitable," he said, and there was a note of humility in his voice. "God helping me, I hope to come back another man—wiser, stronger, more humble. You remember the Arab proverb—In great spaces and a great silence there is opportunity to climb Allah."

"Yes, yes, I do. Tring relented almost roughly. "But what I do happen to know is that in great spaces and silences a man sometimes comes to unwilling knowledge of himself."

It was that single sentence that was uppermost in John Martindale's thoughts, when, having parted from Tring, he started out to keep his last tryst with the woman he loved. "Unwilling knowledge of himself." But she did not need to go out to Africa to know of that ugly fear which lies in ambush for the man who has devoted himself to the service of God.

He was to meet Clemency in the cloisters, for the eccentric old woman whose companion she was allowed her no visitors. At the east door down the worn steps leading to the shadowy arches the girl came forward to meet him—a shadow detaching itself from its fellows. He caught her hands in his. He could feel that she trembled.

"Jack, oh, I thought you were never coming. Your letter—I didn't understand it. It can't mean that you are leaving Rosamond to-night."

His tone was just that. "Clemency."

"Jack." She raised her face to his; in the moonlight it showed all grief distorted. "You can't go to-night. You can't . . . you mustn't!"

"I must Go To-night"

He stooped and kissed her dry, trembling lips.

"To-night." So repeated. "I must go, Mrs. Saxe has wired for me."

"Mrs. Saxe! How dare she! I hate her!" With a passionate cry the girl bent her head and hid it against his arm. "Jack, I can't bear it. If you go my heart will break. . . . There's the train at last. I can be brave no longer." Her voice ended into silence. She had fought so hard to still the fierce rebellion of her nature against the rape of her happiness; now she longed only to throw all the weight of her weakness and her womanhood into the balance against the straight, hard service of God.

He caught her in his arms. "Hush! Dear, if a word from you would make me stay—would you utter it? What value would I have a man who looked back from the plow?"

"Oh, that's past and gone. I am sick of the parrot word duty. I want you. While we are young . . . I need you. I love you!"

She raised her tear-scarred face to his; her lips invited him with an innocent passion. As he beat his own and touched them the passion of her desire to hold him—so fierce, so unfamiliar, half-unconscious as it was, swept his nature detastingly as with flame. His grasp tightened, the barrier of duty, of religion, fell in flat before the trumpet call of nature and of sex.

"Clemency!" His voice, hoarse and unrecognizable, thrilled through the girl roused her to remember what he forgot. She struggled in his arms faintly, but he held her fast. "I can't go through with this thing; I can't leave you, dear. God does not ask for the impossible. He disdains the sacrifice of fools. Tring was right—it's only the wonderlust in my blood making me restless. I can't go, Clemency."

"You Are Promised"

"Oh, hush, Jack! You don't know what you are saying." There was horror in Clemency's voice; she felt like one who has unwittingly profaned a sacred, dedicated thing. "It's madness—you must not. You don't belong to me—to yourself you are promised, you are God's, Jack, let me go."

For a moment he held her, despite her warring hands; but with a desperate struggle she broke from him. He made no effort to detain her.

Through the stillness, drowning the sound of her flying feet, the plain song chant of the cathedral clock came to him as he stood, unnerved and unmanned. Before him lay the last hour of the day a woman had saved to the honor of God and his own salvation. Beyond it lay the dawn of the unknown to-morrow.

The great hall of the Emperor's Restaurant was practically empty when Martindale entered it, for it was barely 1 o'clock. As he sat down at the table an indifferent waiter pointed out to him, in fawn Mrs. Saxe's letter from his pocket and read it again with an excess of indignation against her for calling him up to town on a fool's errand. Mrs. Saxe, with the capriciousness of a wealthy woman whose whims have the weight of commands, had found she had no need of him, after all.

"I do so hoped you have not played the Good Samaritan and answered my hasty appeal. If so, forgive me, she wrote. "A very old friend has found me and I cannot ignore the claims of friendship on my last day in England . . .

To Be Continued Monday.

Golden Silence

PIERALD was not a bad horse to look at. She had a nice white and brown coat, a nice bushy tail, and a nice gentle manner. She possessed one ignominious drawback. She couldn't see. This boy owner discovered a day too late. He visited the horse dealer from whom he had bought the steed and demanded an explanation. "She's stone blind!" he exclaimed.

"I know she is," replied the dealer.

"But—look here, man—you never told me anything about it!" sputtered the irate purchaser.

"Well, you see, it was rather a delicate matter," answered the dealer, coughing slightly. "The man from whom I bought her didn't tell me himself, so I thought," he added, lowering his voice, "he didn't want it mentioned."

NOT A BIGAMIST

"What! marry my daughter, sir?" cried the rich old man. "Why she's my only child."

The young man smiled.

"Oh, that's all right," he said undaunted; "you see, sir, one was all I wanted."

Up-to-Date Jokes

A countryman visiting Dublin took a seat in a train. Being next to a pompous swell, he commenced conversation in a free and easy style. At length the mighty one said: "My good man, reserve your conversation for one of your equals. I'd have you know I'm a K. C."

At this the countryman stood up with outstretched hands, exclaiming: "Shake hands, namesake; I'm a Casey myself."

Mr. Cleaver, how do you account for the fact that I have found a piece of rubber tire in one of the sausages I bought here last week?"

"My dear madam, that only goes to show that the motor car is replacing the horse everywhere.

* * *

Jones—I see, Brown, that you have got a new dog. What's his name?

Brown—Tonle.

Jones—Tonle? What a funny name for a dog!

Brown—Well, you see, I call him tonic because he's a mixture of bark, steal and whine.

First Boy (contemptuously—Huh! Your mother takes in washin'.

Second Boy—O' course. You didn't suppose she'd leave it hanging out at night unless your father was in prison, did ye?

* * *

Mother—Just run upstairs, Tommy, and fetch baby's nightgown.

Tommy—Don't want to.

Mother—Oh, well, if you're going to be unkind to your new little sister, she'll put on her wings and fly back to heaven.

Tommy—Then let her put on her wings and fetch her nightgown.

Ada—Men are slow. It took him nearly two hours to propose to me last night.

Flora—And how long did it take you to accept him, dear?

Ada—Just two seconds.

"I cannot understand ze Englesche language," said the desperate Frenchman. "I learn how to pronounce ze word 'hydrophobia,' and zen I learn zat ze doctors pronounce it 'fatal.'"

THE RIDDON CRAZE.

Ribbons, ribbons, ribbons! From present indications it looks as though Fall and Winter fashions will consist of nothing but ribbons. See Lady Duff-Gordon's fashion page in

SUNDAY'S AMERICAN.

No Imitation for Anty Drudge.

Grocer's boy—"The boss told me to tell you he was just out of Fels-Naptha, but that this soap is just as good, and he's sure you'll like it."

Anty Drudge—"Just out—is he! Well, he's going to be out some more. If he thinks I'm going to use an imitation of Fels-Naptha, just so's he can get a bigger rake-off, he's got another think coming. Some other grocer will get my trade in the future."

Any invention that saves time and labor is bound to come into universal use. Witness the sewing machine, the telephone, the electric light and scores of others. They were received with doubt at first; now every intelligent person takes advantage of them.

So Fels-Naptha soap will some day be used by every woman in this country who washes clothes. More than a million now make it save them time, bother and hard work, and the number is growing every wash-day. If you are not one of these million modern women, you will be some day—just as soon as you have courage enough to break away from old-fashioned methods. Every week your delay means another half day of backbreaking labor, coal or gas wasted, danger of colds from steam, unnecessary wear and tear on clothes.

With Fels-Naptha you can wash in cold or lukewarm water without hard rubbing, and in half the time it takes by the wash-boiler method. Follow closely the directions on the red and green wrapper.

ONE MORE WEEK OF DAFFYDILS

Tomorrow's Sunday AMERICAN will contain the 5th prize winning daffodil received the week in to-and including last Thursday night.

For the benefit of any who might possible have overlooked the daffydill contest a word to the wise should be sufficient—get to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN and read each of the prize winning daffydills. It is the greatest Sunday morning fun discovered.

The last week of the Daffydill Contest is announced today. All daffydills received up to and including next Thursday night will be considered for the awards, which will be announced in the Sunday AMERICAN, September 24.

Those will be the last awards made, and will end the Daffydill Contest, which has been such a huge success here.

Here are two of the latest daffydills received:

When a black hand writes for $10 and is usually a counterfeit, says Miss Helen Wilkinson, No. 44 Bromfield street, Newburyport.

If a rural cadet was asked what his favorite form of entertainment was he'd say Annapolis Tidbitwein. Thanks.—Dunbo, N. H.

If a lamp burns a wick wrecks, how long will a bright wife last?—Mrs. A. J. Jones, No. 45 Jobson street, Roxbury.

If Maud, the mule, wouldn't move, could a caretaker?—Forrest Howard, No. 12 Lafayette street, Brighton.

If the man fell from the moon, did Bill Hyson and Harrison Ford?—Mrs. G. A. Whipple, No. 170 Chestnut street, Providence, R. I.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS; FINANCIAL NEWS

MARKET TAKES A BIG JUMP

STATE STREET, Sept. 16.—Closing—All through to-day's trading the market showed pronounced strength. There was such a demand for stocks that in many instances orders could not be filled at the price limit. Consequently quotations advanced in many cases half a point at a time. Among the stocks most prominent in the advance were Lehigh, Steel, Canadian Pacific, Union, Reading and Missouri Pacific. The average closing was 1% points higher than yesterday.

Strength of the market was attributed to the belief that the Moroccan situation was clearing up, but as a matter of fact stocks which showed the greatest increase have not an international market. The reason for the strength was a different one altogether, said to be that the market had been sold to a very standstill and that any unfavorable position alone was long overdue. In bonds there was a good deal of strength in sympathy with New York. Coppers, however, did not respond to the big advances made in New York by Smelters and Amalgamated, which advanced 1¾ and 2¾ points, respectively. The feature of the trade was a 2-point jump in Utah Copper, which was freely bid for by shorts, who claimed that the elimination of the extra dividend were beginning to look dubious.

MERCHANTS' BANK TO HAVE NEW HOME

One of the biggest improvements in State street property for many years is to be a large up-to-date office building at No. 28 State street, to replace the well-known six-story granite structure known as the Merchants' National Bank Building, which occupies this site.

Announcement of this important change was given by President Arthur B. Alexander of the Merchants' National Bank, which owns the property, in a notice sent to each tenant that the old bank is to be torn down next year. The razing of the present structure and the construction of the new building will immediately follow.

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

One broker, who covered a line of shorts which had been outstanding for weeks, said he got the stock so easily that he felt he had made a mistake in closing out his trades.

Professionals have not dominated the market on the decline, but at the bottom their accumulated long interest was a considerable volume. It is impossible, of course, to learn if they have really changed their position, but it is known that no new large covering orders were executed.

During the last year Europe has been taking our copper at the rate of 200,000,000 pounds per annum, and it is argued should there be no revival of industrial activity abroad and no decided increase in consumption in this country for the next short period of depression confronts the trade.

It is possible that the decline in prices has fully discounted the disaster in connection with the crops. One favorable thing that has perhaps received less attention than it deserves is the disposition of the labor unions in refusing to take action on invitation of the railroad companies.

Another reason for hope is found in the series of speeches to be made by President Taft on a six weeks' tour of the country. He will prove his policies so clear that he will obtain in advance all Republican politicians who will assemble at Washington next Winter to decide whether the Wiley pure food case proves the correctness of his judgment.

There are some who cling tenaciously to the belief that the Canadian Pacific is seeking a hold on the Erie, despite the high dividends on outstanding stock. Among the belief, the one theory is current that the Canadian Pacific interests are quietly ironing out the plan through the "soo." It is believed on that line that through the "Soo" that the Canadian road acquired its hold on Wisconsin Central and that when this process was going on the rumors that the Erie were to be taken over as they do in the case of the Erie, that the road was buying the stock. This is a theory, for all its plausibility, was not credited in quarters usually well informed on the "Soo."

Harden, Stone & Co. have loaned the Rhode Island Coal Company $100,000 on mortgage, and this amount President William Gross believes will carry the company on the basis of profitable production. The company, outside of the debt to Harden, Stone & Co., it is proposed to fund into 6 per cent. notes of the company running for five years, convertible into stock at par at the option of the holder.

DEALERS PRAISE WILEY DECISION

The efforts of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture—the Nation's "watchdog" on the pure food question—were his enemies, the combined beef, big caste of soda, saltcrete acid preservative crowd, is hailed to-day as a real triumph of the people by New England manufacturers, legislators, merchants and State officials.

President Taft's complete vindication of Dr. Wiley, who has been persecuted and harrassed by the interests responsible for the selling of Americans through the preparation and sale of noxious and dangerous food compounds, is everywhere pleased to-day as one of the most just and far-reaching decisions the President has ever made.

Taft May Now Act.

The retention of Dr. Wiley and his consultation from the charge of wrongful acts brought against him by Attorney-General Wickersham, according to the New England defenders of the pure food expert, make it clear that he will be given a broader control of affairs than he has ever enjoyed under Secretary Wilson and that Mr. Taft intends to put the finishing touches to the "ginger" in November when he will have a free hand in the office of "Uncle Jim" Wilson.

Previously, Boston manufacturers of food products who have followed the Wiley rules and regulations to the letter of the law, as was certified in two-thirds of the cases submitted to the Bureau, had nothing to fear from the decision of Dr. F. P. Dunlap, associate chemist, and George E. Patterson, solicitor of the Department of Agriculture. Hereafter this condition will be changed.

Dr. Wiley is expected to be the final judge of the admissibility of the use of preservatives, and he will determine when the manufacturers are violating the law. Already, as a result, hundreds of manufacturers turning out spurious "compounds" of foodstuffs have ceased to put out their products as preservatives may be used, and a situation of confidence and progress doing an illegal business are said to be shielding in fear.

Senator Nason Talks.

No person in Massachusetts is better qualified to pass on the merits of the Wiley decision than Senator Elmer Nason of Stoneham. Senator Nason is a member of Arthur L. Nason of Haverhill, chief of the special committee appointed to investigate the subject of cold storage of food and food products by the last Legislature. Wiley decision that the Agricultural Department is the proper tribunal for the determination of a question of public importance is progressive and able public officials.

Senator Nason and Senator Laughry were pleased at the action of President Taft in upholding Dr. Wiley. "I am glad to hear it. It is an excellent thing for the people of the State," said Senator Nason to the people, for some time to come, at least."

State Treasurer Elmer A. Stevens was equally pleased at the decision.

"President Taft's action fully vindicates Dr. Wiley," said Treasurer Stevens. "I am not necessary in the eyes of the American people. Dr. Wiley has fought nobly and in his public appearances and faithfulness in the interests of the great public is well known."
